Judge Knight Officiates at a Wedding.

Judge of Probate J.T. Knight seems to be a prime favorite with desciples of Hymen. His office at the court house was the scene of another wedding Saturday, in which H. A. L. Jenson and Carrie Cammon, of Thief River Falls, were the contracting parties. After the ceremony, which was witnessed by Auditor Zeb and Clerk of Court Perrault, the Judge assuming his most dignified and fatherly air, delivered some good advice together with his congratulations, to the happy twain.

The Thief River Light Plant Drowns Its Big Wheel.

The electric light in Thief River Falls was to be turned on today, but on awaking yesterday morning the turbine water wheel was found to have played the McGinty act and gone to the bottom of the river. The council is being criticized for having purchased a McGinty wheel. 'Tis not alone the whereabouts of Pat Crowe that concerns the good people of the thriving up-river burg, but the whereabouts of the new wheel. Some say it is in the bottom of the river near where it disappeared, and others claim it floated down stream and that Harry Ives snubbed it before it went over the St. Hilaire dam. The fact is the foundation was faulty and the wheel went down. This with the bonds which are defective along with the execrations of the citizens makes an alderman's life not worth living.

The estimated cost of the plant was three thousand dollars. It has now cost $7,000. The banks have refused to buy the bonds, claiming a defect in issuing them and the city fathers are up in the air. Verily Thief River has its troubles as well as other municipalities.—Crookston Times.

A Frightful Blunder

Will often cause a horrible Burn, Cut, Scald or Bruise. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, will kill the pain and promptly heal it. Cures Old Sores, Fever Sores, Ulcers, Boils, Felons, Corns all Skin Eruptions. Best Pile cure on earth. Only 25 cts. a box. Cure guaranteed. Sold by W. A. Schreiter, Druggist.

Martineau-Laplante.

New Years day witnessed the marriage of two popular young people of Terrebonne when the prosperous farmer N. H. Martineau led to the altar, Miss Alvina LaPlante, one of Red Lake County's fair school maams. The marriage was solemnized in St. Anthony's church, by the Rev. Fr. Roy, in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends.

Of Interest to Farmers.

The North Dakota Linseed Oil Mills at Grand Forks is in the market to buy any kind of flax seed, no matter how badly damaged. This will be of much service to farmers who have been unable to sell wet or damp seed. This institution is also making the finest grade of oil meal for feeding as well as the best linseed oil for painting. The North Dakota Linseed Oil Mills is practically a home institution for the farmers of Red Lake and adjoining counties and is deserving of the support and encouragement of the farmers as it will give them a ready market for their flax seed as well as giving them a product for stock feeding that cannot be excelled. Another thing that should recommend this institution to the farmers is the fact that it is outside of the linseed oil trust and in no way controlled by it.

Parties desiring to dispose of their flax should address John Bannon, Grand Forks, N. D.

Notice.

The regular annual meeting of the stock-holders of this bank for the purpose of electing directors for the ensuing year will be held in the banking rooms on Tuesday January 8th, 1901, between the hours of 9 a.m. to 4 p. m.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

BRITISH-BOER WAR NEWS.

Lord Kitchener has returned to Pretoria from Cape Colony.

A small party of Boers attacked Burghersdorp on Dec. 24. They were repulsed after heavy fighting.

The Boers captured two wagons containing Christmas luxuries destined for the camp of Lord Methuen.

Thornycroft's mounted infantry have occupied Britstown without opposition. The Boers retired to the north in the direction of Prieska.

A dispatch from Cape Town says that railroad traffic has been interrupted by the Boers on all lines running north from the coast.

The Boers celebrated Christmas in the district between Standerton and Ingogo by a more or less determined attack on every British garrison along the line.

Lord Kitchener reports that the British post at Helvetia was captured by the Boers on Saturday. About 50 men were killed and wounded, and 200 taken prisoners.

Kimberley is almost isolated by Boer raiders. No mails have reached there from Dec. 19 to Dec. 26. Provisions are at famine prices. The military took charge of all the food stuffs Dec. 22.

Large bodies of Boers are reported to be concentrating on the northern border of Natal. They summoned the Utrecht garrison to surrender and subsequently attacked it, but unsuccessfully.

The reported capture of General Dewet is untrue. Instead it is reported that he has again broken through the British lines and has taken up a position at Winborg with a large commando.

The latest dispatches from South Africa show that Lord Kitchener has succeeded in holding the invading Boers in check, but has not been successful in expelling them from Cape Colony.

Lord Kitchener reports that Knox, with Barker, Pilcher and White, is engaged with Dewet's force, holding a position in the neighborhood of Lonwkop. Dewet hopes to break through and go south again.

A squadron of Yeomanry which had been following the Boers from Britstown is reported to have been entrapped. There were several casualties, it is said, and the remainder of the force was captured.

A dispatch from Belfast, Ireland, states that all available cavalry has been ordered to prepare for service in South Africa. This is regarded as confirmatory of the report that Lord Kitchener has asked the war office for 30,000 more mounted troops.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Three hundred students have been arrested in St. Petersburg for propagating socialistic doctrines.

Colonel Wilcocks has cabled the British government that the Ashanti rebellion has ended, all of the rebel chiefs have surrendered.

Herr Krupp and other great manufacturers have petitioned for the free admission into Germany of mineral oil for motor consumption with a view of saving the coal deposits of the country.

In its yearly financial review the Frankfurter Zeitung points out that one of the most important facts of the last 12 months has been the growing influence of the United States upon the economic situation of Europe.

The British war office has begun the promised reform of the army by demanding the resignation of Major General Colville, until recently commanding the Ninth division in South Africa. Colville is held responsible for the Yeomanry disaster at Lindsay last May.

THE CRISIS IN CHINA.

The activity of the Germans in districts under British control has caused much irritation. The feeling is so acute that the question has been raised of the British withdrawing from the allied command.

Minister Conger signed the powers' agreement with the reservation that the United States is not to be bound to resume hostilities, to maintain permanent guards in China, or to prevent the importation of arms.

Li Hung Chang and Prince Ching, the Chinese peace commissioners, have heard from Emperor Kwang Su. The court objects strenuously to reducing the forts, and also to allowing permanent legation guards.

The preliminary demand notes of the powers were presented to Prince Ching, one of the representatives of the throne, Dec. 24. Li Hung Chang, the other envoy, was sick, and was not able to be present.

Prince Ching and Li Hung Chang have communicated to the foreign envoys an imperial edict in which the [illegible]peror declares that China accepts the [illegible]joint note, and authorizes Prince Ching and Li Hung Chang to negotiate and to [illegible]ask for a suspension of hostilities.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

"I refuse. They may be thirsty."

"I'll see to that." I laughed.

"But"— she began.

"Oh, Gretchen wishes to see new faces," said I, with chagrin.

"If it pleases you, sir," mischievously.

"What if they are looking for—for"—

"That is the very reason why I wish to see them."

"You are determined?"

"I am."

"Very well," said I. "You had best eat an onion."

"And for what purpose?"

"As a preventive to offensive tactics," looking slyly at her. Her laugh rang out mockingly.

"Do you not know that aside from duelling the German lives only for his barmaid, his beer and his knoblauch? Nevertheless, since you wish it, I will eat one—for your sake."

"For my sake?" I cried in dismay. "Heaven forfend!"

"Does herr"—

"Jack," said I.

"Does Herr Jack think," her eyes narrowing till naught but a line of their beautiful blue green could be seen, "that one of those would dare take a liberty with me?"

"English," I answered discourteously.

"I hope he will not. I should have the unpleasant duty of punching his head." If I could not kiss Gretchen, nobody else should."

"You are very strong."

"Yes. And there are some things which add threefold to a man's strength."

"Such as"— She looked at me daringly.

"Yes, such as"— Her eyes fell before my glance. A delicate veil of rose covered her face for a moment. I wondered if she knew that it was only because I clinched my fists till the nails cut that I did not do the very thing I feared the stragglers coming down the road might do. "Come," said I peremptorily. "There is no need of your welcoming them here!"

So we entered the inn, and she began furbishing up the utensils, just to tease me more than anything else. Outside there was a clatter of hoofs, the chink of the spur, intermingled with a few oaths, and then two representatives of the king came in noisily. They gazed admiringly at Gretchen as she poured out their beer. She saw the rage in my eyes. She was aggravating with her promiscuous smiles. The elder officer noticed my bulldog pipe.

"English?" he inquired indifferently. The German cannot dissociate an Englishman and a brier wood bulldog pipe.

"English," I answered discourteously. It mattered nothing to me whether he took me for an Englishman or a Zulu. Either answered the purpose.

He wore an eyeglass through which he surveyed me rather contemptuously.

"What is your name, fraulein?" he asked, turning to Gretchen.

"Gretchen," sweetly.

"And what is the toll for a kiss?"

"Nothing," said Gretchen, looking at me. The lieutenant started for her, but she waved him off. "Nothing, Herr Lieutenant, because they are not for sale."

I moved closer to the bar. "Out for a constitutional?" I asked, blowing the ash from the live coal in my pipe.

"We are on his majesty's business," with an intonation which implied that the same was none of mine. "Gretchen, we shall return tonight, so you may lay two plates at a separate table," with an eye on me. He couldn't have hated me any more than I hated him. "Then there is no way of getting a kiss?"

"No," said Gretchen.

"Then I'll blow you one," and Gretchen made a pretty courtesy.

I nearly bit the amber stem off my pipe. They were soon gone, and I was glad of it.

"Herr Jack is angry," said Gretchen.

"Not at all," I growled. "What right have I to be angry?"

"Does Herr Jack wish Gretchen always to be sad?"

"Certainly not, but sometimes your joy is irritating. You are sad all day; then some strangers come, and you are all smiles. Your smiles do not come in my direction as often as I should like."

"Well, then, look at me," said Gretchen.

The smile would have dazzled an anchorite, let alone a man who didn't know whether he loved her for certain, but who was willing to give odds that he did.

"Gretchen!" I cried, starting toward her.

But, with a low laugh, she disappeared behind the door. Gretchen was a woman. As a man must have his tobacco, so must a woman have her coquetry. It was rather unfair of Gretchen after what I had promised. It was like getting one in a cage and then offering sweetmeats at a safe distance. It now became a question of analysis. So I went to the river and sat down in the grass. A gentle wind was stirring the leaves, and the sunbeams, filtering through the boughs, fell upon the ground in golden snowflakes. What was Gretchen to me that I should grow jealous of her smiles? The night before I could have sworn that I loved her; now I was not so sure. A week ago all the sunshine in the world had come from Phyllis' face; now a shadow had come between. Oh, I knew the symptoms! They were not new to me. They had visited me some five years back and had clung to me with the tenacity of a creditor to a man with expectations. When a man arrives at that point where he wants the society of one woman all to himself, the matter assumes serious proportions. And a man likes to fall in love with one woman and continue to love her all his days. It is more romantic. It annoys him to face the fact that he is about to fall in love with another. In my case I felt that there was some extenuation. Gretchen looked like Phyllis. When I saw Gretchen in the garden and then went to my room and gazed upon the likeness of Phyllis, I was much like the bachelor Heine tells about—I doddered.

The red squirrel in the branches above me looked wise. He was wondering how long before the green burs would parch and give him their brown chestnuts. I was contemplating a metaphysical bur. I wanted to remain true to Phyllis, though there wasn't any sense in my doing so. Had Gretchen resembled any one but Phyllis I never should have been in such a predicament. I should have gone away the day after my arrival. Here I was going into my second week. My assistant in London was probably worrying, having heard nothing from me during that time. As matters stood it was evident that I could not be true either to Phyllis or Gretchen since I did not know positively which I loved. I knew that I loved one. So much was gained. I wanted to throw up a coin, heads for Phyllis, tails for Gretchen, but I couldn't bring myself to gamble on the matter.

A steamer came along then, puffing importantly, sending a wash almost at my feet. I followed it with my eye till it became lost around the bend. Over there was Austria and beyond the orient, a new world to me.

"If I could see them together!" I mused aloud.

The squirrel cocked his head to one side as if to ask, "Austria and Turkey?"

"No," said I, looking around for another stick, "Phyllis and Gretchen. If I could see them together, you know, I could tell positively then which I love. As it is, I'm in doubt. Do you understand?"

The squirrel ran out to the end of the limb and sat down. It was an act of deliberation.

"Well, why don't you answer?"

I was startled to my feet by the laughter which followed my question. A few yards behind me stood Gretchen.

"Can't you find a better confidant?" she asked.

"Yes, but she will not be my confidant," said I. I wondered how much she had heard of the one sided dialogue. "Will you answer the question I just put to that squirrel of yours?"

"And what was the question?" with innocence not feigned.

"Perhaps it was, Why should Gretchen not revoke the promise to which she holds me?"

"You should know, herr," said Gretchen gently.

"But I do not. I only know that a man is human and that a beautiful woman was made to be loved." Everything seemed solved now that Gretchen stood at my side. But she turned as if to go.

"Gretchen," I called. "Do not go. Forgive me. If only you understood!"

"Perhaps I do understand," she replied with a gentleness new to me. "Do you remember why I asked you to stay?"

"Yes; I was to be your friend."

"This time it is for me to ask whether I go or stay."

"Stay, Gretchen!" But I was a hypocrite when I said it.

"I knew that you would say that," simply.

"Gretchen, sit down and I'll tell you the story of my life, as they say on the stage." I knocked the dead ash from my pipe and stuffed the bowl with fresh weed. I lit it and blew a cloud of smoke into the air. "Do you see that, Gretchen?"

"Yes, herr," sitting down, the space of a yard between us.

"It is pretty, very, but see how the wind carries it about! As it leaves my throat it looks like a tangible substance. Reach for it, and it is gone. That cloud of smoke is my history."

"It disappears," said Gretchen.

"And so shall I at the appointed time. That cloud of smoke was a for mae. I reached for it, and there was nothing but the air in my hand. It was a woman's love. For five years I watched it curl and waver. In it I saw many castles, and the castles were fair indeed. I strove to grasp this love; smoke, smoke. Smoke is nothing given a color. Thus it is with our dreams. If only we might not wake!"

Gretchen's eyes were following the course of the laughing river.

"Once there was a woman I thought I loved, but she would have none of it. She said that the love I gave her was not complete because she did not return it. She brought forth the subject of affinities and ventured to say that some day I might meet mine. I scoffed inwardly. I have now found what she said to be true. The love I gave her was the bud. The rose—Gretchen," said I, rising. "I love you. I am not a hypocrite. I cannot parade my regard for you under the flimsy guise of friendship."

"Go and give the rose to her to whom you gave the bud," said Gretchen. The half smile struck me as disdainful. "You are a strange wooer."

"I am an honest one." I began plucking at the bark of the tree. "No. I shall let the rose wither and die on the stem. I shall leave tomorrow, Gretchen. I shall feel as Adam did when he went forth from Eden. Whatever your place in this world is, it is far above mine. I am, in truth, a penniless adventurer. The gulf between us cannot be bridged."

"No," said Gretchen, the smile leaving her lips, "the gulf cannot be bridged. You are a penniless adventurer, and I am a fugitive from—the law, the king or what you will. You are a man. Man forgets. You have just illustrated the fact. His memory and his promises are like the smoke—they fade away but soon. I shall be sorry to have you go, but it is best so."

"Do you love any one else?"

"I do not. I love no one in the sense you mean. It was not written that I should love any man."

"Gretchen, who are you, and what have you done?"

"What have I done? Nothing! Who am I? Nobody!"

"Is that the only answer you can give?"

"It is the only answer I will give."

There was something in Gretchen's face which awed me. It was power and resolution, two things man seldom sees in a woman's face.

"Supposing, Gretchen, that I should take you in my arms and kiss you?" I was growing reckless because I felt awed, which seems rather a remarkable statement. "I know you only as a barmaid. Why not?"

She never moved to go away. There was no alarm in her eyes, though they narrowed.

"You would never forgive yourself, would you?"

I thought for a moment. "No, Gretchen, I should never forgive myself. But I know that if I ask you to let me kiss your hand before I go you will grant so small a favor."

"There," and her hand stretched toward me. "And what will your kiss mean?"

"That I love you, but also respect you, and that I shall go."

"I am sorry."

It was dismal packing. I swore a good deal softly. Gretchen was not in the dining room when I came down to supper. It was just as well. I wanted to be cool and collected when I made my final adieu. After supper I lit my pipe (I shall be buried with it) and went for a jaunt up the road. There was a train at 6 the next morning. I would leave on that. Why hadn't I taken Gretchen in my arms and kissed her? It would have been something to remember in the days to come. I was a man and stronger; she would have been powerless. Perhaps it was the color of her eyes.

I had not gone up the highway more than 100 yards when I saw the lonely figure of a man tramping indirectly toward me and directly toward the inn. Even in the dusk of twilight there was something familiar about that stride. Presently the man lifted up his voice in song. The "second lead," as they say back of the scenes, was about to appear before the audience.

Evidently Hillars had found "Jericho" distasteful and had returned to protest.

CHAPTER XI.

"Hello there!" he hailed, seeing but not recognizing me. "Have you seen any cavalry pass this way?"

"No; I have not," I answered in English.

"Eh? What's that?" not quite believing it was English he had heard.

"I said that no cavalry has passed this way since this afternoon. Are they looking for you, you jailbird in perspective?"

He was near enough now. "Well, I be dashed!" he cried. "What the devil are you doing here of all places?"

"I was looking for you," said I, locking my arm in his.

"Everybody has been making that their occupation since I left Austria," cursing lowly. "I never saw such people."

"What have you been doing this time?"

"Nothing, but I want to do something right away. They have been hounding me all over the kingdom. What have I done? Nothing, absolutely nothing. It makes me hot under the collar. Do they think to find the Princess Hildegarde by following me around? I'd give as much as they to find her."

"So you haven't seen anything of her?"

"Not a sign. I came here first, but not a soul was at the castle. Nobody knows where she is. I came here this time to throw them off the track, but I failed. I had a close shave this noon. I'll light out tomorrow. It isn't safe in these parts. It would be of no use to tell them that I do not know where the princess is. They have connected me with her as they connect one link of a chain to another. You can kill a German, but you can't convince him. How long have you been here?"

I took the lieutenant by the collar and flung him into the corner.

I did not reply at once. "About ten days."

"Ten days!" he echoed. "What on earth has kept you in this ruin that long?"

"Rest," said I glibly. "But I am going away tomorrow. We'll go together. They will not know what to do with two of us."

"Yes; they will. You will be taken for my accomplice. Hark! What's that?" holding his hand to his ear. "Horses. Come, I'm not going to take any risk."

So we made a run for the inn. In the twilight haze we could see two horsemen coming along the highway at a brisk gallop.

"By the Lord Harry," Hillars cried excitedly, "the very men I have been dodging all day! Hurry! Can you put me somewhere for the time being? The garret; anywhere."

"Come on. There's a place in the garret where they'll never find you." I got him up stairs unseen. If no one but I knew him to be at the inn, so much the better.

"Oh, say! This'll smother me," said Dan as I pushed him into the little room.

"They'll put you in a smaller place," I said.

"Hang it all, Jack! I'd rather have it out with them."

"They have their pistols and sabers."

"That's so. In that case discretion is the better part of valor, and they wouldn't appreciate any coup on my side. Come back and let me out as soon as they go."

I descended into the barroom and found the two officers interrogating the innkeeper. They were the same fellows who had visited the inn earlier in the day. Gretchen was at her place behind the bar. She was paler than usual.

"Ah," said the innkeeper, turning to me, "am I not right in saying that you are the only guest at the inn and that no American has been here?"

I did not understand his motive, for he knew that I was an American.

"It is perfectly true," said I, "that I am your only guest."

"Ah, the Englishman!" said the lieutenant suspiciously. "We are looking for a person of the name of Hillars whom we are charged to arrest. Do you know anything about him?"

"It is not probable," said I nonchalantly.

I glanced at Gretchen. I could fathom nothing there.

"Well," snarled the lieutenant, "I suppose you will not object to my seeing your passports?"

"Not in the least," said I. But I felt a shock. The word "American" was written after the nationality clause in my passports. I was in for some excitement on my own account. If I returned from my rooms saying that I could not find my passports, they would undoubtedly hold me till the same were produced. "I'll go and bring them for you," said I. I wanted some time in which to mature a plan of action if action became necessary.

There was rather a sad expression in Gretchen's eyes. She understood to a fuller extent than I what was likely to follow when it was found that I had misrepresented myself. I cursed the folly which had led me to say that I was English, and I swore at the innkeeper for meddling. As I left the room I smiled at Gretchen, but she did not answer it. Perhaps I was gone five minutes. In that time I made up my mind to show the passports and trust to luck for the rest. When I came back, Gretchen had engrossed their attention. They took no notice of me. I have never understood how it came about, but all at once the lieutenant bent forward and kissed Gretchen on the cheek. She started back with a cry, then looked at me. That swift glance told me what to do. I took the lieutenant by the collar and flung him into the corner. The surprise on his face was not to be equaled. Then as he rose to his feet the veins in his neck swelled with rage.

"I'll pay you for that, you meddling beef eater!" he roared.

"Don't mention it," said I, with an assumption of blandness which I did not feel. "That was simply gratuitous. It is a sample of what I shall do to you if you do not immediately ask this lady's pardon for the gross insult you have just offered her."

"Insult! To kiss a common barmaid an insult!" he yelled, now purpling. "Why—why—what is this woman to you—this tavern wench, this"—

"Be careful," I warned. Gretchen was calmly wiping her cheek, but her eyes were like polished emeralds.

FARMERS' REST ROOM.

The idea of a farmers' rest room is a good one, and one that might profitably be adopted by Red Lake Falls. Senator J. H. Stout, of Menomonee, has made a proposition to donate to that city a fine two story building, 24x48 feet, fitted with steam heat, a bath room, toilet rooms, closets, etc., as a farmers' rest room, providing the citizens would maintain it.

The proposition has been accepted. The building will be erected next spring. The building will be in charge of a competent person and its use as a lunch room, bath, toilet and rest rooms will be free to farmers. Reading matter will be supplied.

The same idea has been in operation in Preston, Minn., for some time and has been in charge of the W. C. T. U. of that place. In this case its use has been more especially designed for farmers' wives while in town shopping. They leave their extra wraps, arrange their toilet or care for the little ones at the room. The business men pay the rent, and Miss Kate Little is the woman in charge, who gladly welcomes all who call. Cut flowers are for sale, the proceeds go towards the support of the room.

APHORISMS.

Pity chided Love for breaking a woman's heart.

"You introduced me to her," said Love.

A Trend of Modern Thought met a Great Idea.

"Where are you going?" said the Great Idea.

"I'm going to make a successful novel," said the Trend of Modern Thought.

"Let me go with you."

No, thanks. You might spoil the whole affair."

"Can't you cure him?" said Hope to Time.

"No," said Time sorrowfully, "he has a genius."

It isn't so hard to be poor as it is to be poorer.

Philosophy consists in knowing how to be happy though selfish.

Before marriage a man holds an umbrella over a woman's head to keep her from getting wet—after marriage to keep her hat from getting wet.

Some men never can be inconsistent. That is why they fail.

Pride cometh after a fail.

Happiness is the feeling we experience when we are to busy to be miserable.—Tom Masson, in the Century.

COUNTY BOOK-KEEPING.

The commission appointed to draft a bill for the legislature, revising the system of county accounting in use in Minnesota has completed its work and submitted the complete bill to Gov. Lind yesterday with a report covering the process of its development. The members of the commission were selected at the recent meeting of the Minnesota county auditors and treasurers and appointed later by the governor.

The bill submitted lessens the work of the county treasurers and adds to the duties of auditors. A complete check is arranged for all receipts and disbursements and the warrant feature, endorsed by the public examiner, state auditor, governor and county officials themselves, is retained.

Ignatius Donnelly died in Minneapolis Tuesday night, Jan. 1, at [illegible] o'clock, at the residence of his father-in-law. Heart failure was the cause.

ODDEST DELUSION YET.

Kingston, Ont., can boast of a good many things of which it is proud, but the latest it can make is a little bit eccentric. Of all the crazy men with queer delusions there is none to compare with that of an individual who is confined in the insane asylum in this city. He thinks he is a poached egg, and for 20 years he has been looking for a piece of toast big enough to sit down on. When visitors come and meet him, he always approaches them with the request for a moment's conversation in private. As he is perfectly harmless the keepers do not put any restrictions upon him. If you grant his request, he whispers in your ear:

"Have you got a piece of toast about you?"

"No," you say. "What is the matter with you? Are you hungry?"

"Hungry?" ejaculates the man. "Why should I be hungry? I get plenty to eat. I'm tired. I'm a poached egg, and I'm looking for a piece of toast to sit on."

Naturally this request leads to laughter, and the poached egg retires in high dudgeon, but he comes back regularly on the arrival of the next batch of visitors to see if he can't have better luck. All sorts of things which look like toast have been supplied to the man, but he wants the real thing, and as chairs and couches are not made out of toasted bread he is obliged to go on making his perpetual plea to visitors. In all other respects the man seems normal, and if this crazy idea could only be got out of his head he might obtain his discharge. As he persists in his delusion he will probably spend the rest of his days in the asylum.—New York Sun.

Kissing Done in Smoke.

A REPENTANT SINNER.

By Count Leo Tolstoi.

Explanation of the cause of Count Leo Tolstoi's excommunication from the Russian church is found by his friends in his latest story entitled "A Repentant Sinner." This story was first published in the Novoe Vremya, St. Petersburg, and such was its unusual nature that it immediately involved all the doctrinaires in heated discussion. Following is a translation of the story:

"There once dwelt on the earth a man 66 years old. He had lived his entire life without virtue and without repentance, and this man became sick, and still he did not repent. And when death approached and his last hour had come he prayed,

"'Lord, as thou didst pardon the thief on the cross, pardon me.'

"After he had spoken he gave up the ghost, and his spirit, beloved of God, had faith in the mercy of the Creator and soared to the threshold of paradise. And the sinner knocked suppliantly for entrance into heaven. From behind the gate came a voice, saying:

"'Who knocks at the gate of paradise? How did he live on earth?'

"The voice of the judge replied, enumerating all the sins of the man. 'There was not one virtue to his credit. And the voice from behind the gate said:

"'Sinners cannot enter the portals of heaven. Depart!'

"But the man said, 'Lord, I hear thy voice, but I have never seen thy face, and I do not know thy name.'

"And the voice replied, 'I am Peter, the apostle.'

"And the sinner said: 'Have pity on me, Peter. Remember the weakness of men and the great heart of God. Were you not a disciple of Christ? Was it not you who received the doctrines from his lips? You have had the example of his life. Oh, remember! He was in trouble and asked you three times not to sleep, but to pray, and you slept because your eyelids were heavy with sleep, and thrice he came and found you asleep. Even so have I done. Recall also that you renounced him three times before Caiaphas after promising him thrice never to deny him. This also have I done. You will not keep me out of heaven, will you?

"And the voice died away behind the gates of paradise, and at the same instant the sinner ceased knocking, for the gate of heaven opened. But another voice was heard from behind an inner door, which demanded:

"'Who is this man, and how did he live on earth?'

"Once more the voice of the accuser replied, enumerating all the sins of the man, and there was not a single meritorious action to his credit, and the voice replied from behind the inner door:

"'Depart! So ignoble a sinner cannot live among us in paradise.'

"And the man said, 'Lord, I hear thy voice, but I have never seen thy face, nor do I know thy name.'

"'I am the royal prophet David.'

"The sinner did not despair. He did not recede, but said:

"'Have pity on me, King David. Remember the weakness of man and the large heart of God. God loved you. He gave you a place above other men. You had everything—royalty, glory, gold, favorites and children. But from the infinite height of your position you saw the wife of a poor man. Sin surrounded you. You yielded to temptation, and you took the wife of Uri and delivered her husband to the avenging sword of the Ammonites. You, the king, took from the poor man his last ewe. Even so have I done. And remember how you repentantly said, "I remember my sins, and I repent of them." Even so have I done, and surely you will not bar the door of heaven for me.'

"And the voice died away from behind the inner door of heaven. At that moment the sinner ceased knocking, for the door was opened half way. Then a third voice came from behind the door and said:

"'Who is this man and how did he live on the earth?'

"And for the third time the voice of the accuser replied, enumerating the man's sins without recounting a single virtue, and the voice replied:

"'Get thee hence! Such sinners cannot enter the kingdom of heaven.'

"And the man said, 'I hear thy voice, but I have never seen thy face, and I do not know thy name.'

"And the voice replied, 'I am John the Evangelist, the favorite disciple of Christ.'

"At that the sinner rejoiced and said: 'Now they surely cannot keep me out. Peter and David let me enter because they knew the weakness of human nature and the great heart of God. You, John, will surely let me enter, because you are filled with love. Was it not you, O John the Evangelist, who exclaimed in your lifetime, "God is love, and who does not love cannot know God?" Was it not you who, in your weakness, but repentance, exclaimed, "Brothers, love ye one another?" How will you then refuse me; how will you deny me entrance? Either renounce what you have said or love me and open for me the inner door of heaven.'

"And the door opened wide, and John the Evangelist embraced the sinner and allowed him to enter the kingdom of heaven."—Chicago Times-Herald.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

I wish you all, and thank you for your patronage in the past and hope that I have merited a continuance of the same.

Now is the time for resolutions. Some may say, make no New Years' resolutions so you will have none to break, but I do not believe in that. I believe in making good resolutions and strictly adhering to them. For next year I resolve to treat my customers as well as we have in the past, and better, if possible: to sell goods as cheaply as they can be legitimately sold anywhere; not to be undersold by anyone: to keep our store up to standard in styles and fashions: to make it the best store in the city. If we fail in any of these resolutions, you will do us a favor to let us know wherein we fail.

This is the time of the year to TURN OVER A NEW LEAF.

If you are not entirely satisfied with your trading place why not try us? Give us a trial and see if you cannot improve on the old place. We say it, we mean it, we can prove it, that in many lines, our goods are distinctly superior to other lines. In Clothing, Shoes of all Kinds, Gents' Furnishings, Ladies' Gloves we are pre-eminent leaders. To sum up you better also make at least one good resolution, and let that be to trade with us.

Remember our free shoe offer to some lucky purchaser of a suit or overcoat. Somebody will be pleased. You may be the one.

Yours to serve.

Meanwhile the architect's fees, it is said, have exceeded $60,000, and an effort in the city council to dismiss him has failed.

The United States leads all other nations in the matter of fruit growing. Strawberries were valued at $80,000,000 last year and grapes at $100,000,000. The introduction of trolley roads has not seriously disturbed the business of steam roads, as was predicted. Trolley lines are especially numerous in Connecticut, and the Hartford Courant finds by an analysis of official reports that while the trolley, relieves the steam roads of some local travel it adds to the growth of cities and towns and largely increases the freight traffic.

In the face of the clock of the parish church of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, London, are two small holes, which from the pavement do not appear large enough to admit even a tiny bird. Yet these apertures have been chosen by sparrows as nesting places, and the birds can be frequently seen flying to and from their strange abode. The operations of the sparrows do not appear to have affected the time keeping accuracy of the clock.

THE SPORTING WORLD.

One of the chief necessities of a modern football team that hopes for any kind of success is a good staff of coaches. The big colleges have got the science of football down to so fine a point that each has its own system of playing the game, which is carefully handed down year by year. For instance, the system adopted by the University of Pennsylvania requires big men, as they depend almost wholly on heavy line plunges to make gains and do not use end plays or the kicking game except in a case of necessity or when too close to their own goal line.

GEORGE WOODRUFF.

This system has its most able instructor and best exponent in George Woodruff, head coach of the varsity team. He has developed and brought to perfection the famous art of strategy known as the "guards back" interference, on which the Pennsylvanians rely for most of their gains. Harvard, on the contrary, while it uses line bucking to a certain extent, has developed the science of end running and the developing of interference to protect runners in such plays to a greater extent than any other university.

International Athletic Union.

A mail vote of the governors of the Amateur Athletic union has empowered President Weeks to appoint delegates to represent this country in the proposed formation of an international athletic union. Weeks has appointed E. E. Babb of the New England association, W. H. Liginger of the Central association, Dr. Mowell Hopkinson of the Atlantic association and J. E. Sullivan of the Metropolitan association. He appointed as alternates L. H. Sheldon of the New York Athletic club and B. Spalding de Garmendia, the old New Jersey A. C. man. Instructions have been sent to the alternates informing them that they have no authority whatever to bind the A. A. U. to membership in this union until the A. A. U. knows more about the status of the organization, and, as the annual meeting of the A. A. U. will be held next month, the entire matter will be fully discussed at that time.

Ban Johnson's Statement.

President Johnson of the American Baseball league has made the positive statement that his league will put teams in Baltimore and Washington this year. Here is the statement: "The American league will have clubs at both Washington and Baltimore next year with or without the consent of the National league, and at our next meeting we will also consider a report on Philadelphia and New York. The national agreement is a document framed by the major leagues to prevent competition in their territory, and they need it more than we do. It has redounded to the great benefit of the National league and has served very effectually to hold the minor leagues in check and exact tribute from them. Before entering Chicago last year we were bound hand and foot, powerless to help ourselves."

Her Majesty a Humanitarian.

The queen of the Belgians is not only a first rate whip, but also a great lover of animals. When in Spa, she is constantly in the stables attached to her villa, assuring herself that the horses are well cared for. It was mainly owing to her majesty's efforts that the dogs there are no longer muzzled in the streets. Apart from her personal interest in dumb creatures, her majesty's tastes and habits are most simple and unostentatious.

His Business.

"What are you doing in my house?" demanded the owner of the premises, suddenly appearing on the scene in his nightshirt and carrying a huge revolver.

"I am taking active steps to get out of it," replied the burglar, vanishing through a window without taking the trouble to open it.—Chicago Tribune.

Give Perfect Satisfaction.

Towne—Old Plandder is a very steady man, isn't he?

Browne—Yes. The firm thinks very well of him. He went to them as office boy over 30 years ago.

Towne—Indeed! I suppose he holds quite an important position there now.

Browne—Oh, yes! He's still office boy.—Philadelphia Press.

Didn't Ask Much.

Her Father—And I s'pose you expect if I consent to let you have my daughter that I will set you up in business and make you rich?

Mr. Sapleigh—No; I really haven't any such extravagant expectations as that. I'm willing to take her just for my board and clothes.—Spare Moments.

GET ORDERS TO SIGN

CHINESE ENVOYS RECEIVE UNEXPECTED INSTRUCTIONS.

Must Agree Fully to the Preliminary Joint Note—They Are Also to Try for Modifications Especially Regarding the Disarming of the Forts—Li Hung Chang Unable to Act.

PEKING, Dec. 31.—The Chinese plenipotentiaries have been unexpectedly ordered to sign the preliminary joint note and have notified the foreign envoys to that effect.

The Chinese themselves were greatly astonished at receiving the imperial instructions. Neither Li Hung Chang nor Prince Ching had expected success in persuading the court under 10 days.

The emperor's instructions are to agree fully to the note, but to endeavor to get the best terms possible, particularly in the matter of limiting the number of legation guards and also as to the places where these are to be located.

The plenipotentiaries are instructed to endeavor to limit the number of army posts along the line of railway to as few as possible and finally to request the powers not to destroy the forts but merely to disarm them.

Li Hung Chang's health is bad and it is doubtful whether he will be able to do more than affix his signature to an instrument delegating his powers to Prince Ching until another plenipotentiary [illegible] been appointed. He was dressed and carried in a chair to the residence of Prince Ching, with whom he held a long consultation. Prince Ching then called upon the doyen of the diplomatic [illegible], the Spanish minister, Senor de Cologan, and [illegible] to notify the other envoys [illegible] [illegible] the emperor to sign the note.

PLEASED AT WASHINGTON.

[illegible] That the Emperor Has [illegible] [illegible]

WASHINGTON, [illegible] 31.—The report that the Chinese plenipotentiaries [illegible] been directed to sign the joint note is [illegible] of satisfaction to officials here as [illegible] a disposition on the part of the Chinese government to heed the desire of the powers that negotiations shall be entered on at once and the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs terminated. The emperor, it is expected, would instruct his agents to obtain the best terms possible. One of the principal objections said to have been made by the Chinese to the formation of any great number of legation guards in Peking is that these guards would be a menace to the existing Chinese government. As has already been stated in these dispatches, the United States government does not desire the absolute demolition of the Taku forts, but simply their dismantlement so that ready access to the Chinese capital of the foreign forces would not be prevented. The demand of the powers in the joint note, however, was for the destruction of the forts.

ARE GREATLY SATISFIED.

Decided Tone of Collective Note Pleases Foreign Communities in Peking.

PEKING, Saturday, Dec. 29.—The foreign communities in Peking are greatly satisfied at the decided tone of the collective note and the assertion that the powers are determined to entertain no proposals for the modification of their demands. It is understood Li Hung Chang sent a memorial to the throne couched in very strong terms urging complete compliance.

The Germans killed 40 Chinese troops near Man Cheng, northwest of Pao Ting Fu. They had no casualties.

Among the natives a feeling of great distrust is being caused, apparently, by the high-handed action of the Germans, as the Chinese suspect them of an intention to force a serious engagement with the Chinese troops.

PREPARING TO RETURN.

Persistent Rumors That the Imperial Court Will Soon Come to Peking.

SHANGHAI, Dec. 31.—There are persistent reports in circulation here that the imperial court is preparing to return to Peking. Chinese advices from the capital say that 90 carts with mules and horses have been dispatched to Tai Yuen Fu to meet and bring back the imperial personages and their entourage.

It is also asserted that Emperor Kwang Su has summoned Hu Ping Chih, former governor of the province of Shan Si, to Sian Fu to accompany him to Peking.

The Mohammedan rising in the province of Kan Su is spreading and the troops of the viceroy of the province of Hu Nan are alone able to hold their own against the rebels.

WILLIAM WESTLAKE DEAD.

Well Known Inventor Passes Away at His Home in Brooklyn.

CHICAGO, Dec. 31.—A private telegram received here announced the death at his home in Brooklyn of William Westlake, one of the founders of the Adams & Westlake company, and widely known as an inventor. Mr. Westlake held over 300 personal patents, among the best known being the opentop handlantern, which made possible the system of lantern signalling, universally used on railroads. He was also the inventor of the first railway car lamp. Mr. Westlake was born in Cornwall, Eng., in 1831 and came to the United States in 1857.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 26.—As a result of a conference between President Mellen and Vice President Kendrick of the Northern Pacific, that company has sent a lengthy communication to the committee of telegraph operators, in session at St. Paul, notifying them that the Northern Pacific could not consistently agree to adopt in toto the book of rules submitted by the committee in behalf of the Northern Pacific branch of the Order of Railway Telegraphers. Neither could the company see its way clear to treat with the Order of Railway Telegraphers as an organized body, but would cheerfully treat with the telegraphers as a body of Northern Pacific employes.

Thieves Drive Off a Drove of Cattle From His Farm.

ELDORA, IA., Dec. 31.—Another drove of fine cattle have been drove from the farm of ex-Governor Boies in Grundy county, 10 miles east of Eldora. This time there is no clew to the thieves nor where the cattle are. This is the second loss Governor Boies has had from cattle stealing within two years. In the former theft he lost a carload of cattle, but he discovered the theft, and the proceeds were sent him in an unknown manner by draft from Chicago, where the stock was sold.

Sunday Performances No Violation.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1.—Cases against two theatrical managers, arrested recently for keeping their houses open on Sunday, were dismissed by Justice Everett, who held that so long as Sunday theaters did not actually disturb the peace by creating a physical disturbance there was no violation of the law in giving a Sunday performance.

Believed to Be an Iowa Man.

JEFFERSON, Ind., Jan. 1.—All night long trains on the Baltimore and Ohio and the Big Four ran over the body of a man near Otisco, 20 miles east of this city, grinding the flesh into small bits. A memorandum book was found bearing the name William Gilmore of Ottumwa, Io. It is believed the man was murdered and placed on the track.

WATERLOO, Ia., Jan. 1.—Fire in the Union Mill company destroyed the entire building, 3,000 sacks of flour and all the machinery. The total loss is $50,000; insurance $25,000. It was the largest fire in Waterloo's history. The new Syndicate block of six stories, about completed, was saved with difficulty.

Found Hiding in a Hay Loft.

FORT DODGE, Ia., Dec. 31.—Johnnie Tonhose, the 9-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Lew Tonhouse of Judd, Ia., who was supposed to have been kidnapped 10 days ago, was found hiding in a hay loft. The boy had lived on vegetables which he had taken from the cellar. His feet and legs were frost-bitten.

Governor Drake Again Ill.

CENTERVILLE, Ia., Dec. 31.—Former Governor Drake is again quite ill from his old army wound, being caused by inflammation of the periosteum at the base of the spinal column. Ulceration is threatened, which would doubtless prove very serious. He was 70 years old Sunday.

LEADS THE COUNTRY

IMMENSE BUSINESS OF THE DULUTH LAND OFFICE.

Rumors That James J. Hill Will Become a Director in the St. Paul Road. Minneapolis Man Held for a Chicago Murder—St. Paul's Quarantine Against Winona Raised—State News in General.

DULUTH, Dec. 28.—The receipts for the Duluth land district for the year ended June 30, 1900, were $170,103, which, according to the report of the general land office just issued, exceeds those of any other land office in the United States. Only one other district approaches that of Duluth, which is Devils Lake, N. D. The receipts of the land office there were $175,142. This is taken as one of the most indisputable evidences of the rapidity with which settlers are filling up Northern Minnesota, and the country at large is beginning to appreciate the value of land in this region for agriculture as well as timber. The counties in the district are Cook, Aitkin, Lake, Itasca, Carlton and St. Louis.

IN THE ST. PAUL.

Hill and Ream to Be Chosen Directors at Next Annual Meeting.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1.—Norman B. Ream and James J. Hill will, it is said, go into the directorate of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad company at the next annual meeting. It is also rumored that J. J. Hill is to become president of the company. On the street this is taken to mean that J. Pierpont Morgan and the Standard Oil people are in control of the St. Paul system.

To the company itself it means much more. It signifies an alliance between the St. Paul and the Northern Pacific, the Great Northern, the Erie and the Baltimore and Ohio, as well as with a number of other companies in which the interests named are dominant. Morgan and his friends have always been in favor of good dividends and the statement is made that the St. Paul dividend will at once be raised to a 0 per cent basis, as against the present 5 per cent rate.

Mr. Hill is president of the Great Northern Railroad company. Morgan interests are dominant in Northern Pacific, and these two companies will do business with the St. Paul, assuring in the letter the traffic trade of the two former. The Baltimore and Ohio should also profit through the combination, as both the gentlemen who are to go into the St. Paul directory are directors in Baltimore and Ohio.

YOUTHS' DEPARTMENT.

A Bird Love Story—How a Boy Measured a Tree—Can She Be I?

A very pretty little comedy in bird life was brought to my notice the other day at Lincoln park, says a Chicago writer. I was standing by the cage which contains the English magpie, crows and several other species of songsters when my attention was attracted toward one of the peacocks, so many of which are to be found wandering at liberty about the grounds.

He was standing very close to the cage and seemed so intent on watching something on the other side of the wire barrier that I was curious to find out the cause of his abstraction. He was so perfectly unconscious of any other sound or presence that I approached to within a few inches of him, and there, on the inside of the cage, stood the magpie, making every demonstration of affection for the peacock.

I never heard sweeter warbling from any canary, and his lovemaking was certainly understood and appreciated by the object of his affection. The peacock seemed perfectly fascinated by his beautiful sweetheart, and I was amused to note how evident it was that his feeling was reciprocated.

I watched them for some time, and, though the magpie would be driven away again and again by the crows, which seemed to object very strongly to his partiality for the peacock, he would always return and take up the story again, and the peacock seemed never to tire of the tale.

I shall watch with interest this simple little love story between the captive magpie and the stately peacock.

How a Boy Measured a Tree.

He is not a boy in a book. He lives in our house. He seldom says anything remarkable. He eats oatmeal in large quantities and tears his trousers and goes through the toes of his boots and loses his cap and slams the doors and chases the cat just like any other boy. But he is remarkable, for he asks a few questions and does much thinking. If he does not understand, he whistles—an excellent habit on most occasions.

There was much whistling in our yard one summer. It seemed to be an all summer's performance. Near the end of the season, however, our boy announced the height of our tall maple to be 33 feet.

"Why how do you know?" was the general question.

"Measured it."

"How?"

"Footrule and yardstick."

"You didn't climb that tall tree?" his mother asked anxiously.

"No, mother; I just found the length of the shadow and measured that."

"But the length of the shadow changes."

"Yes, mother, but twice a day the shadows are just as long as things themselves. I've been trying it all summer. I drove a stick into the ground, and when the shadow was just as long as the stick I knew that the shadow of the tree would be just as long as the tree, and that's 33 feet."

"So that is what you have been whistling about all summer?"

"Did I whistle?" asked Tom.

Can She Be I?

Through many, many summers
I look, as through a glass,
And see a world of showers and flowers
And laughing children pass,
And in her big blue sunbonnet
One other little lass—

A lass who watched the swallows
Skim just beyond her hand
And where the flickers fled and sped
And nests of hang birds tanned
And felt those birds were fairy folk
On wing to fairyland.

In her warm fist she carried—
Trudging o'er hills and dales—
In tiny papers laid, and weighed
As if in fairy scales,
The salt that catches bobolinks
When sprinkled on their tails.

A little lass and wistful,
Who gazed up the far sky,
And reached for fairy things and wings
In vain and wondered why;
Poor little lass! I wonder still Could she be really I?

A Boy Preacher.

George Haines of Winfield, Pa., is a theological wonder. Aged but 9 years, he holds religious services every Sunday morning and preaches a sermon, his favorite texts being taken from the fourteenth chapter of St. John.

Young Haines is the son of Amos Haines, a well known merchant. In preaching he makes many striking gestures and evinces the greatest earnestness and enthusiasm.

Many stories are told of the lad's precocity by the townspeople. Almost from the moment he could talk George began to show unmistakable signs of a preacher's calling.

In Search of Honey.

It has been said that the busy bee will go as far as 12 miles in search of honey, but beekeepers declare this to be absurd. One states that the insect will die of starvation if it has to seek a hunting ground more than three miles from the hive. Some give the bee greater powers of endurance and allow that it may fly up to five or even six miles, although such journeys would be killing if regularly taken. As a rule, however, it is supposed bees find their supplies within a distance of two miles or so of their home.

A Lamp Roost.

Nellie was much interested in Aunt Mary's chandelier when she went to the city to stay with her, and when she went home she exclaimed:

"Oh, mother, I do wish we had a place for our lamps to roost on like Aunt Mary has!"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

WYLIE GAZETTE.

Edited by H. P. JOHNSON, Wylie, Minn.

A department devoted to the interests of Wylie and the district tributary Subscriptions received by H. P. Johnson.

THE FARMERS AND THEIR SONS.

The communities in which The Gazette finds its support are in every respect progressive ones. The farmers are independent and generally well to do; towns are growing larger, roads are bettered, accomodations in general have been gradually improved. Time and work have enhanced the value of land. But the young man of today even in addition to their aid in the progress, have to go out and earn in some way a salary, especially if there are many in the family. If a young man is in earnest about his future, he may have to experience many worrisome instances, and work his mind and imagination through many sleepless nights.

As the young men thus fight their early life battles, the parents form their opinions about them, and the neighbors who also has sons in the world is usually not slow in forming his. That neighbor's sons probably went out into the world, and working honestly on farms or in the city, and intervals at home, at last strikes a steady position in town, bringing a salary of 50 or 60 dollors a month. The father gives his son due credit, he is enthusiastic about his responsible position, and convinced that not one of the other farmer boys can reach that round of the ladder of success, yea, that they have not the natural talent and qualifications that sparkle in the eyes and adorn the features of his own.

Other farmers son's of other families, probably yet young, go out into the world, meet with obstacles like others did before them, and as they realize the stern reality of life, and get a glimpse at the beauty concealed in learning, culture, and education, cast their lots with that of the poor, restless, hardworking student, and spend in search after education, all they can earn.

That neighbor with his sons in the lucrative positions will by no means have his sons put in the shade by others. In society he gives his view in the contest, tell how his sons could save money and not spend it on schools and now hold responsible places, while those others go away to high schools or colleges spend their time and money, and yet seemingly accomplish nothing. According to this critic they have not the talent, not the right personal magnition, and in short the world has no place for them.

There, far away from home sits the student over his books, buried in thought. He looks on his calendar and schedule and finds time to be most precious; he thinks of his own existence and says as he looks around into the world; "I have my mission, my calling, my sphere to work in; there is place for me. I am gifted by God and surely not put into this world for nothnig." And so he studies night and day till his cheeks are pale and thin, while men in high positions waste hours of time each week and throw money with it in society, saloon, ballroom, and the theatre.

As the student in an institution of learning acquires knowledge; is taught good morals and good breeding, and now probably sits uneasy through the twenty-four hours of the day, because of an approaching series of examinations, he gets a letter. It is from the dear home whose memories always, while far away, send him their sweetest fragrance. O! how welcome the letter! He is somewhat fatigued; everything has more or less darkened for him; everybody seems to him worth a thousand pounds more than himself; all in his class seem to know their lessons better and have easier far to learn than he. He is nothing in his own esteem, and ready to give up all hope of ever becoming anything in life. Encouragement is now worth more to him than gold. He opens his letter—it is framed with fatherly and motherly love, full of trustworthy advice, and from hearts that beat for his welfare. He reads it. Those words of love and kindness warm his heart, and lend him new courage. But, now he comes to the last paragraph, the local news. There he reads of a neighbor's coming over the other day, who had been talking about boys going far away to school, and mentioned his own who never spent anything on schooling and yet hold such high and responsible positions. Also he maintained that those boys can go as far off as they like to a school, be it China or Turkey, they will not be anything anyway.

Now the young man lowers his chin, puts his right hand as an awning over his eyes and begins to think, "Am I really as stupid as all that, is it impossible to reach the destination I seek, shall not my efforts be rewarded as well as my neighbors, although they are in other directions, and shall for a certainty my work not be crowned with success?". Thus new unreasonable burdens are placed upon his shoulders.

It has been truly said that if you are not lifting on the burdens of others, you are leaning on them. Certainly a neighbor of that spirit is not lifting. Why not instead lift on the burdens of others and not lean on them? They are heavy enough without other's weight.

Charley Larson could not take in all that the merry Christmas time invited him to. He was ill and had to go to Red Lake Falls to consult a doctor last Thursday.

There was a party at the home of S. J. Larson Thursday evening. All present reported a good time. It was interrupted by three wreckless characters, masqueraded and blackened. After making some disturbance and having had their attires well tested by those present, they at last thought it wiser to depart.

C. W. Johnson invited a number of his East friends for a sleigh-ride Christmas eve. The ride was from the meeting place to O. T. Romos' at Wylie, where all had a most enjoyable time playing games till a late hour, when refreshments were served by the ladies. Ole's talking machine then made the closing ode and all left for home.

The Ebenezer Young People's Society met Friday night and a good program was rendered. The subject: "Resolved that the school system of Europe is better than that of the United States" was debated. Decision rendered in favor of the affirmative. Some of the members show a lacked of interest by being mostly always absent from the meetings. Those on the program should always try to come.

In the issue of the 20th ult. it was reported that Chas. Sandberg had had a raffle on a rifle. K. L. Sandberg, has asked the editor of this page to make known to his many friends, who may not know his initials, that said raffle was not held at his home, but at the bachelor's own residence. Mr. K. L. is strictly against that style of enjoyment, and is doing all in his power to prohibit it within his family.

Charles Landa, a farmer living four miles north of Wylie, left home July 17 last and started on a trip he had planned to take to Nebraska to look up land. From that day to this he has not been heard from, and is a completely lost as if he bad fallen into a hole a mile deep, and the opening had closed over him. He had $75 when he left home, and it is thought he has been foully dealt with. His wife and fourteen children still reside in this county.

The children's festival in the Swedish Lutheran church was well attended and favored with a nice evening. A number from Wylie turned out, and many of different nationalities and denominations from all around attended. Nels M. Johnson and Selander Highberg, of Crookston, were there. The children did well also the new choir. The committee for the festival had a hard time to find a tree, there being none in Crookston, Red Lake Falls, Thief River Falls, or St. Hilaire, at last a wind-broken one was bought in Crookston for which a very high price was paid. It is not a snap to be on the committee under such circumstances.

"You have come here, I believe," said I, "to see if my passports were proper."

"Curse you and your passports! Are you a gentleman?"

"Would you recognize one if you saw him?" I laughed.

"Can you fight?"

"Certainly," said I, thinking of the weapons nature in her kindness had given to me.

"Good! Otto, have the horses brought around. We will cut for the barracks and get the colonel's weapons, the rapiers." The word "rapier" sent an icy chill up my spine. A duel!

"The devil!" said I under my breath. I knew less about fencing than I did about aerial navigation, which was precious little. The fact that Gretchen was now smiling aggravated the situation. I could not help the shudder. Why, the fellow would make a sieve out of me!

"Will you look at my passports now?" I asked. "You may not have the opportunity again."

"Your passports from now on will be void," was the retort. "But I shall be pleased to give you a passport to the devil. I shall kill you," complacently.

"Think of my family," said I, a strange humor taking possession of me.

"You should have thought of your family before you struck me that blow," he replied.

My laughter was genuine. Even Gretchen smuggled a smile. The lieutenant had taken my remark in all seriousness. "You will not run away?" he asked.

"I shall probably be obliged to run away tomorrow," said I smoothly. "I should not be able to account for your presence here. But I shall await your return from the barracks, never fear." All this was mere bravado. Honestly, I shrunk within my clothes and shivered in my shoes. But I had an unfailing nerve. Some call it bluff.

Gretchen had been whispering to the innkeeper. When he moved from her side, she was smiling.

"What the deuce is she smiling about?" I wondered. "Does the woman take me for a modern D'Artagnan?"

"Innkeeper," said the lieutenant, "if this man is not here when I return I'll take satisfaction out of your hide."

The innkeeper shrugged. "I have never heard of an Englishman running away."

"And I have seen many a German do that," I put in. "How am I to know that your going to the barracks is not a ruse?"

He gasped. The words would not come which would do justice to his feelings. He drew off one of his gloves and threw it into my face. It stung me. I should have knocked him down but for the innkeeper stepping between.

"No, herr," he said; "do not disable him."

"You had best go to the barracks at once," said I to the lieutenant. My clothes were too small for me now, and I did not shiver in my shoes. My "Yankee" blood was up. I would have fought him with battleaxes.

"Herr," said the innkeeper when the two had made off for the barracks, "you are a man of courage."

"Thanks," said I.

"Do you know anything about rapiers?" he asked.

"I know the handle from the blade; that's all. But that does not make any difference. I'd fight him with any weapon. He struck me, and then—then he kissed Gretchen."

"I have wiped it off, herr," said Gretchen dryly. Then she passed from the room. I went up stairs too. I looked out of my window. There was moonlight, possibly the last time I should ever see moonlight in the land of the living. Nothing but a mishap on my opponent's part and that early in the combat would save my epidermis. The absurd side of the affair struck me, and I laughed mirthlessly, but none the less I laughed. If it had been pistols, the chances would have been equal. A German does not like pistols as a dueling apparatus. They often miss fire. A sword is a surer weapon. And then the French use them—the pistols—in their fiascoes. Rapiers? I was as familiar with the rapier as I was with the Zulu assegai. I unstrapped my traveling case and took out Phyllis' photograph. I put it back. If I was to have a last look at any woman, it should be at Gretchen. Then I got out my cane and practiced thrusting and parrying. My wrist was strong.

"Well," I mused, "there's consolation in knowing that in two hours I shall be either dead or alive."

I flung the cane into the corner. To pass away the time I paced back and forth. It passed too quickly, and it was not long ere I heard the clatter of the returning cavalrymen. Some one knocked at my door. I swung it open and was thrown to the floor, bound and gagged in a tenth of a minute.

"Put him on the bed," whispered the leader of my assailants. When this was done, the voice added, "Now you can go to the stables and wait there till I call you."

It was the innkeeper. He surveyed me for a moment and scratched his chin.

"Will herr keep perfectly quiet if I take the handkerchief from his mouth?" he asked. I nodded, bewildered.

"What in tophet does this mean?" I asked. I did not say tophet, but it looks better in writing.

"It means nothing and everything," was the answer. "In the first place, herr will fight no duel. The man with whom you were to fight was sent on an errand to this out of the way place as a punishment for his dueling at the capital. I know him by reputation. He is a brawler, but a fair swordsman. He would halve you as I would a chicken. There is another who has a prior claim on him. If there is anything left of Herr Lieutenant at the end of the fray, you are welcome to it. Yes; there will be a duel, but you will not be one of the principals. It is all arranged."

"But I do not understand!" I cried.

"It is not necessary that you should." He laughed and rubbed his hands in pleasurable anticipation. "There is a young man down stairs who arrived a few moments before the lieutenant. He has a special affair. There were words. Herr Lieutenant is mad enough to fight a whole company."

"Then why in heaven's name am I up here in this condition?" I cried. "Let me go and be the young man's second, though I can't for the life of me see where he has come from so suddenly and I might say opportunely. Come, cut me loose."

"It is too late."

"Too late?"

"Yes. Herr Lieutenant has been informed that you ran away."

"Ran away!" I roared. "You told him that I ran away? Curse your insolence! I'll break every bone in your body for this!" I cried, straining at the ropes.

"The ropes are new," said he. "You'll hurt yourself."

"You told him that I ran away?" This was too much.

"Yes. Ah, but you will be surprised. The duel will last five minutes. Herr Lieutenant will thrust. The thrust will be parried. He will feint; useless. Thrust on thrust, parry on parry. Consternation will take the place of confidence. He will grow nervous. He will try all his little tricks, and they will fail. Then his eyes will roll and his breath come in gasps. Suddenly he thinks he sees an opening. He lunges. Ach, the fool. It is all over!" The old man's voice quivered with excitement. He had passed his time in the barracks and had seen many a sword skirmish.

"Well, are you going to take off these ropes?"

"No. You would break every bone in my body."

I groaned in exasperation.

"You will soon be out of breath."

Oh, could I have but loosened those cords!

"Stahlberg, who left the service a year ago, will act in the capacity of second." Stahlberg was at the head of the vineyard. "I shall watch the affair from the window here. The scene of action will take place in the clearing beyond. It will be an affair worth witnessing."

"And where is Gretchen?"

"Where she should be—at the bar, a dutiful barmaid." Then I heard nothing but the deep cachinnations of the innkeeper. There was something in the affair which appealed to his humor. I could not see it. For ten minutes my vocabulary was strictly unprintable.

"Will you kindly tell me what the meaning of all this is?"

"Herr Winthrop, the idyl has come to an end. The epic now begins."

CHAPTER XII.

The golden summer moon was far up now, and the yellow light of it came into the window and illumined the grim face of the innkeeper, throwing a grotesque shadow of him on to the floor. The leaves rustled and purred against the eaves. As the branches moved so did the light and darkness move over the innkeeper's visage. He was silent and meditative.

"An epic?" I said.

"An epic."

"Innkeeper," said I, "if I give you my word of honor not to molest you or leave this room will you let me be a witness?"

He passed into the gloom, then back into the light. "This is no trick?" suspiciously. "I have a deal of regard for my old bones, old as they are."

"On my honor."

"Well, I'll do it. It is in the blood of us all. But a false move on your part, and I promise you that this knife shall find a resting place in you."

He cut the ropes, and I was free. But my arms ached. The two of us took our stand by the window and waited for the principals in the drama about to be enacted in the clearing. I confess that my conscience was ill at ease. Why I knew not. I was dreading something, I knew not what. The innkeeper's hand trembled on my arm.

"Sh! They come," he whispered.

As I looked beyond his finger I saw four figures advance over the sward. One of them, a slight boyish form, was new to me. The fellow walked briskly along at the side of Stahlberg, who was built on the plan of Hercules. When they came to the clearing, they stopped. The seconds went through the usual formalities of testing the temper of the swords. Somehow I could not keep my eyes off the youngster who was going to do battle with the veteran, and I could not help wondering where in the world he had come from and why in the world he had chosen this place to settle his dispute in. There were plenty of convenient places in the village in and around the barracks. He took his position, back to me, so I could not tell what he was like. The moon shone squarely in the lieutenant's face, upon which was an expression of contempt mingled with confidence. My heart thumped, for I had never seen a duel before.

"I do not know where you came from," I heard the lieutenant say, "but you managed nicely to pick a quarrel. It is all on your own head. It is too bad that cur of an Englishman had to run away."

The innkeeper's knife was so close that I could feel the point of it against my ribs. So I gave up the wild idea of yelling from the window that I hadn't run away. The lieutenant's opponent shrugged. He placed himself on guard. That was his reply. Suddenly the two sprang forward, and the clash of swords followed. I could not keep track of the weapons, but I could see that the youngster was holding his own amazingly well. Neither was touched the first bout.

"Two minutes," murmured the old rascal at my side. "It will be over this time."

"You seem to have a good deal of confidence in your man," said I.

"There is not a finer swordsman in the kingdom, or on the continent for that matter. There, they are at it again!"

Step by step the lieutenant gave ground. The clashing had stopped. It was needlelike work now. Gradually they began to turn around. The blades flashed in the moonshine like heat lightning. My pulse attuned itself to every stroke. I heard a laugh. It was full of scorn. The laugh—it recalled to me a laugh I had heard before. Evidently the youngster was playing with the veteran. I became fascinated. And while the innkeeper and I watched a curious thing happened. Something seemed to be slipping from the youngster's head. He tried to put up his free hand, but the lieutenant was making furious passes. A flood of something dimly yellow suddenly fell about the lad's shoulders. Oh, then I knew! With a snarl of rage I took the innkeeper by the throat and hurled him, knife and all, to the floor, dashed from the room, thence to the stairs, down which I leaped four at a time. Quick as I was, I was too late. The lieutenant's sword lay on the grass, and he was clasping his shoulder, with the sweat of agony on his brow.

"A woman!" he groaned. "A woman!" Then he tottered and fell in the arms of his subordinate. He had fainted.

"This will make a pretty story!" cried the young officer as he laid his superior lengthwise and tried to stanch the flow of blood. "Here's a man who runs away and lets a woman—God knows what sort—fight his duels for him, the cur!"

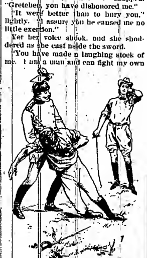
I never looked at him, but went straight to Gretchen. Stahlberg gave me a questioning glance and made a move as though to step between.

"Stand aside, man!" I snapped. "Gretchen, you have dishonored me."

"It were better than to bury you," lightly. "I assure you he caused me no little exertion."

Yet her voice shook, and she shuddered as she cast aside the sword.

"You have made a laughing stock of me. I am a man and can fight my own battles," I said sternly. "My God," breaking down suddenly, "supposing you had been killed!"



He tottered and fell in the arms of his subordinate.

"It was not possible. And the man insulted me, not you. A woman? Very well. I can defend myself against everything but calumny. Have I made a laughing stock of you? It is nothing to me. It would not have altered my"— She was very white, and she stroked her forehead.

"Well?" said I.

"It would not have altered my determination to take the sword in hand again."

She put her hand to her throat as though something there had tightened. "Ah, I am a woman, for I believe that I am about to faint. No!" imperiously as I threw out my arms to catch her. "I can reach the door alone without assistance."

And so we went along. I did not know what to do nor yet what to say. A conflict was raging in my heart between shame and love—shame that a woman had fought for me and won where I should have lost, love that strove to spring from my lips in exultation. I knew not which would have conquered had I not espied the blood on Gretchen's white hand.

"You are wounded!" I cried.

She gazed at her hand as though she did not understand; then, with a little sob and a little choke, she extended her arms toward me and stumbled. Was ever there a woman who could look on blood without fainting? Gretchen had not quite fainted, but the moon had danced, she said, and all had grown dim.

"Gretchen, why did you risk your life? In God's name, what manner of woman are you and where did you learn to use the sword? Had you no thought of me?" I was somewhat incoherent.

"No thought of you?" She drew the back of her hand over her eyes. "No thought of you? I did it because—because I did not—I could not—you would have been killed!"

I was a man—human. I loved her. I had always loved her. I had never loved any one else. I was a coward to do what I did, but I could not help it. I crushed her to my breast and kissed her lips, not once, but many times.

"How dare you?" weakly.

"How dare I, Gretchen, dear Gretchen?" I said. "I dare because I love you! I love you! What is it to me that you have dishonored me in the eyes of men? Nothing. I love you. Are you a barmaid? I care not. Are you a conspirator? I know not nor care. I know but one thing. I love you. I shall always love you. Shall I tell you more? Gretchen, you love me!"

"No, no, it cannot be!" she sobbed, pushing me back. "I am the most wretched woman in the world. Do not follow me, herr. Leave me; I beg you to leave me. I have need of the little strength left. Leave me, leave me!"

And she passed through the doorway into the darkness beyond. I did not move from where I stood. I grew afraid that it was a dream and that if I moved it would vanish. I could yet feel her lithe, warm body palpitating in my arms. My lips still tingled and burned with the flame of hers. An exultant wave swept over me. She loved me! She had not told me so, but I knew. She had put her heart before mine. My life was dearer to her than her own. I could have laughed for joy. She loved me! My love overwhelmed my shame, engulfed it. Then—

"I know you," said a harsh voice at my elbow. It startled me, and I wheeled swiftly. It was the lieutenant's brother officer. "I thought from what I heard of you that you were a man worth trouble and caution. Ach, you, the man we have scoured the country for? I should not have believed it. To let a woman fight for him! And she—she is more than a woman—she is a goddess!" with enthusiasm. "If I was betrothed to her, I'd find her if I had to hunt in heaven and hell for her. And what does she see in you?" He snapped his fingers derisively. "I warn you that your race is run. You cannot leave a railway station within the radius of a hundred miles. The best thing you can do is to swim the river and stop in the middle. The prince is at the village, and he shall know. Woe to you, you meddler!"

"Young man," said a voice from over my shoulder from the doorway, "you should by right address those impertinent remarks to me. I am Hillars, the man you seek."

And I had forgotten his very existence! What did he know? What had he seen?

"You may inform Count von Walden," continued Dan, "that I shall await his advent with the greatest of impatience. Now let me add that you are treating this gentleman with much injustice. I'll stake my life on his courage. The Princess Hildegarde is alone responsible for what has just happened."

"The Princess Hildegarde!" I cried.

Hillars went on: "Why she did this is none of your business or mine. Why she substituted herself concerns her and this gentleman only. Now go, and be hanged to you and your prince and your count and your whole stupid country. Come, Jack!"

The fellow looked first at me, then at Dan.

"I apologize," he said to Dan, "for mistaking this man for you." He clicked his heels, swung around and marched off.

"Come," said Dan.

I dumbly followed him up to my room. He struck a match and lit the candle.

"Got any tobacco?" he asked, taking out a black pipe. "I have not had a good smoke in a week. I want to smoke awhile before I talk."

I now knew that he had been a witness to all or at least to the larger part of it.

"There is some tobacco on the table," I said humbly. I felt that I had wronged him in some manner, though unintentionally. "The Princess Hildegarde!" I murmured.

"The very person," said Hillars. He lit his pipe and sat on the edge of the bed. He puffed and puffed, and I thought he never would begin. Presently he said, "And you never suspected who she was?"

"On my word of honor, I did not, Dan," said I, staring at the faded designs in the carpet. The golden galleon had gone down, and naught but a few bubbles told where she had once so proudly ridden the waters of the sea. The Princess Hildegarde! The dream was gone. Castles, castles!

"I am glad you did not know," said Dan, "because I have always believed in your friendship. Yet it is something we cannot help, this loving a woman. Why, a man will lay down his life for his friend, but he will rob him of the woman he loves. It is life. You love her, of course."

"Yes." I took out my own pipe now. "But what's the use? She is a princess. Why, I thought her at first a barmaid—a barmaid! Then I thought her to be in some way a lawbreaker, a socialist conspirator. It would be droll if it were not sad. The Princess Hildegarde!" I laughed dismally. "Dan, old man, let's dig out at once and close the page. We'll talk it over when we are older."

"No; we will face it out. She loves you. Why not? So do I." He got off the bed and came over to me and rested his hands on my shoulders. "Jack, my son, next to her I love you better than anything in the world. We have worked together, starved together, smoked and laughed together. There is a bond between us that no human force can separate. The princess, if she cannot marry you, shall not marry the prince. I have a vague idea that it is written. 'The moving finger writes and, having writ, moves on.' We cannot cancel a line of it."

"Dan, you will do nothing rash or reckless?"

"Sit down, my son, sit down. Premeditation is neither rashness nor recklessness. Jack, life has begun with you. With me it has come to an end. When there is nothing more to live for, it is time to die. But how? That is the question. A war would be a godsend. But these so called war lords are a lazy lot or cowardly or both. Had I a regiment, what a death! Jack, do you not know what it is to fight the invisible death? Imagine yourself on the line, with the enemy thundering toward you, sabers flashing in the sunlight and lead singing about your ears. It is the only place in the world to die—on a battlefield. Fear passes away as a cloud from the face of the sun. The enemy is bringing you glory—or death. Yes, I would give a good deal for a regiment and a bad moment for our side. But the regiment non est. Still, there is left"—

"Dan, what are you talking about?" I cried.

Death—grim, gaunt and gray death, whose footstep is as noiseless as the fall of snow; death, the silent one, as the Indian calls him."

He knocked the ash from his pipe and stuffed the brier into his pocket.

"Jack, I am weary of it all. If I cannot die artistically, I wish to die a sudden and awful death. What! Do I look like a man to die in bed, in the inebriates' ward? For surely I shall land there soon! I am going to pieces like a sand house in a windstorm. I suppose I'm talking nonsense. After all, I haven't as much to say as I thought I had. Suppose we turn in? I'm tired. You see, those fellows moved me around today."

CHAPTER XIII.

Hillars and I stood in the middle of the road. He held the binoculars. "How many can you make out?" I asked.

"Four. All on horseback. There's a coach of some sort following on behind. But everything is blurred, and my hand trembles. The whisky here is terrible. Here, look for yourself," handing the glasses to me. "Tell me what you see."

"There's one with a white cap—ah, it is Count von Walden! There are two soldiers in the Hohenphalian uniform, cavalry. I do not know who the fourth fellow is."

"Describe him to me," said Hillars, trying to roll a cigarette with his trembling fingers. "Curse it"—throwing away the rice paper—"I've got so bad that I can't roll a cigarette! Well, what's he look like?"

"He's in civilian dress; has a little black mustache and an imperial."

"Look anything like Napoleon III?"

"You've hit it. Who is he?"

"They say he's Prince Ernst of Wortumburg," said Hillars, "but it is my opinion that he's the devil on a furlough."

"Then he is the man"— I began.

"He is. Your love affair is all over once he gets here, unless"— Dan looked at the sky as though he was undecided about the weather.

"Unless what?" I asked.

"Oh, just unless," said he. "I'd give £5 for a glass of homemade whisky."

"You've got a plan of some sort," said I. "Speak it out."

"It wasn't a plan; it was just an idea. It's gone now. Maybe it will come back later. Are you going to stay here or come with me and tackle a bottle of the innkeeper's Rhine wine? The German vinegar used to make you hilarious."

"What's the coach for?" I asked. "Are they going to carry us off like a couple of chickens?"

"I presume it is for her serene highness. I wonder how they found out she was here? Probably the lieutenant you were going to fight, but didn't, informed them. At any rate, the coach will not be for us. The prince will not bother with you and me while the princess is here. I don't know what they will do with us. Possibly nothing; possibly put us in jail. Come along; I'm thirsty."

It was late in the afternoon of the day following. I had not seen her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde—Gretchen. She had remained in her room, and all efforts of mine to hold communication with her had proved futile. I had stood at her door and supplicated. She had told me to go away. The innkeeper had scowled when I suggested that he carry a note to his mistress. He had refused.

"The princess receives no notes," he had said. "Gretchen—it was a different matter."

And Hillars had slept till after noon. It had been a bad morning for me. The wounded lieutenant had been carried away the night before, and there had not been anything for me to do but wander about—waiting.

"Will you help me with the Rhine wine?" asked Hillars.

"No. My head is fuddled enough as it is."

"Then you must let me do all the talking."

"And why you?"

"I shall know better how to irritate them," with a laugh. "They will not take any particular interest in you when they set eyes on me. Homo sum! I am the man they are looking for. They will find plenty of me. I shall be a syndicate in myself. Where they expect to find one man they will find a dozen, all alive and kicking. It will be good sport."

"What the devil are you up to?" I demanded.

"Wait and see; wait and see. Come, let us receive them in the hall. The affair must be conducted on the line of court etiquette. First, we shall try to avert hostilities by the aid of diplomacy. If that fails, the princess herself will be made to vindicate us. And why not?"

"You are not going to drag her in!" I exclaimed.

"My dear Jack, of course not. The prince and the count will do that for us. You understand that she is concerned in all that is to take place, do you not? Well, then, it will cost her but little."

"But this fellow the prince!" I cried. "Let us get out while there is time." Dan regarded me seriously.

"You aren't afraid of him. What do you want to run away for? My son, there will be some very good sport before this is done. You will miss it by running away."

"It's meeting the man who is to marry her—the woman I love. That is the reason."

"To marry her—the woman I love!" he repeated softly. "Yes, it is hard. But it isn't any worse for you than for me."

"Forgive me, Dan! You know"—

"Yes, yes; I know," crossly. "Hang it, can't I punch it into your head that I am taking all this trouble on your account? If it were not for you, do you suppose I'd wait? The prince shall never marry the princess. Will that satisfy you? 'Now, look pleasant,' as the photographer says, for here they are."

The count entered first, then the prince, who was followed by two cavalrymen. Hillars and I stood silently by our chairs and waited. The prince, a man with a hooked nose, black eyes with half shut lids, regarded me curiously. He had the air of one amused. When his eyes grew accustomed to the semidarkness of the room, the count sounded a note of satisfaction.

"Ah, so you are here? You have given me a devil of a chase!"

"I return the compliment, Herr General," said Hillars, with a good humored smile. "But, may I ask, what the devil have you been chasing me for?"

For reply the count turned to the cavalryman. "Arrest that man and bind him!" he said.

"You might make the order wholesale," said I, stepping over to the side of Hillars.

"I told you there would be some sport," whispered Dan. He put his arm across my shoulders.

"And who, in the name of Weimar, are you?" bawled the count. He scrutinized me intently. Then a light of recognition broke over his face. "The other one! A nest of them!"

"Count," interposed the prince, seating himself at the table, "let me have a short talk with them before you act. There may be extenuating circumstances. Anything of this sort amuses and interests me. Let us use a little diplomacy in the matter."

"Yes," said Hillars; "let us lie a little."

"And who can do it better than a journalist?" the prince laughed.

"Diplomatists," Hillars sent back.

"What is her serene highness to you?" resumed the prince.

"Nothing; positively nothing."

"Then you are afraid to acknowledge your regard for her?"

"I?" Hillars dropped his arm from my shoulders. "I am not afraid of anything—not even the count here." Then he laughed. "If her serene highness was anything to me, your highness, I should not be afraid to say so before the king himself."

My hands were around the throat of Prince Ernst.

"You impudent"— But a wave of the prince's hand silenced the count.

"Have patience, my friend. This is not impudence; it is courage and prudence, I believe," readdressing Hillars, "that once you were on the point of eloping with the Princess Hildegarde."

Hillars thrust his hands into his pockets. "So they say."

"And yet you deny your regard for her!"

"Oh, as to that affair," said Hillars easily, "it was the adventure more than anything else. It is not every man in my position who has such a chance. And then, perhaps, I saw a good newspaper story." The muscles in his jaws hardened, despite the airy tone he used.

"I see that there is nothing to be got from you." Then the prince directed his glance to me. "And you, sir; what is she to you? What is her serene highness to you?"

"She is everything in the world to me," said I.

The consternation which followed cannot be described here. The count stepped back dumfounded. Hillars regarded me as though he thought I had suddenly gone mad. The countenance of the prince alone remained unruffled.

LET THE CAUCUS DECIDE

Government in our country is one by parties. The great parties announce in their platforms their stand on the great issues of the day; these announcements, in conjunction with the inherent principles of a party, together with precedent, polity and party record, give the voter a basis on which to make a decision in casting his ballot. In state as well as in national matters, these rules hold good. The overwhelming victory of the Republican party in this state, leaves that party in full control, and with the laurels as well as the responsibilities. No democrat or populist can be elected senator, and therefore, it is the belief of the editor of this paper, that it is for the best interests of the Republican party that the senatorial question should be settled by a Republican legislative caucus: that the caucus should be held at as early a date as possible. Besides the party expediency involved, and the justness of allowing the matter to be settled without the participation of the democratic minority, the interests of the state demand that this question be speedily settled, so that the state's business may not be neglected, and all danger of an unseemly and undignified scramble, involving a scandal, be removed. Were conditions reversed, and had the democratic party received the majority given to the Republican party in this state it would be our opinion that the Democrats should settle the matter in caucus, without the participation of the Republican minority.

MOSES E. CLAPP.

The prominence attained by Moses E. Clapp in his candidacy for U. S. senator from this state, to succeed the late C. K. Davis, makes the following short biographical sketch, of peculiar interest:

He was born in Delphi, Ind., May 25, 1851. His parents removed to Hudson, Wis., in 1857. After receiving a good common school education he studied law and graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1873. He entered upon the practice of law at Hudson and was quite successful. He was elected county attorney for St. Croix county in 1879. He moved to Fergus Falls, Minn., in 1881 and was city attorney during 1883, 1884 and 1885. He was nominated for attorney general by the republican convention in September, 1885, defeating W. S. Patee, now dean of the law department of the University of Minnesota, and Frank B. Kellogg, of the late firm of Davis, Kellogg & Severance. He was elected by a complimentary majority, and being re-nominated served as attorney general three terms. In 1892 he moved to St. Paul, where he has since resided. In 1896 he was a candidate for nomination for governor. While he was defeated the contest demonstrated that he was one of the ablest men of the state. He is a good lawyer and well informed upon all leading questions, a forcible speaker, is a fine orator, and, with a good personal appearance commands an audience when he speaks. He is dignified, yet congenial and accessible to all, and, as a result, very popular. He is married and has three children.

The Hennepin paper mill of Little Falls burned Monday morning, causing a total loss of $75,000 or more. The insurance is $63,000. The pulp mill was damaged. The fire was first discovered in a small wood room between the mills.

A BIG ADVERTISER.

H. L. Kramer, treasurer and general manager of the Sterling Remedy Co., manufacturers of "Cascarets" and Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills, states that his company within four years has bought and paid for $1,750,000 in advertising, and submits that this is a pretty good showing for a concern that started in a very small way. He adds:

"The returns are just beginning to come in, our sales last year being over 6,000,000 boxes of Cascarets, and with this showing we feel encouraged to push on with a new line of advertising, even though our experience proves to us that it takes three years to get our money back."

THE GAZETTE FOR 1901.

The Gazette has made arrangements for publishing the financial statement, delinquent tax list and commissioners' proceedings for the coming year, so that our large family of readers will get the complete official county news as usual. Our large and efficient corps of correspondents will continue to send in the neighborhood news from every corner of the county, while we will look well after the local field. The news of the world will be printed from week to week in condensed and convenient form. There will be good miscellaneous reading, serial and short stories, etc. The Gazette will give its readers a better paper in the future than it has in the past, with improvements in all features. We are now printing and sending out 1,400 papers weekly, and hope to largely increase this list the coming year. If every subscriber of The Gazette will lend a helping hand by assisting in getting new readers, it will be appreciated, and it simply means, the larger we grow, the better will be the paper.

KEEPS HIS OWN COUNSEL.

The statement sent out to the effect that James J. Hill has at last secured control of the Northern Pacific and the consequent rise in stocks reminds a broker of the story illustrating Mr. Hill's ability to keep his own counsel. It was several years ago when it was rumored Mr. Hill was about to obtain control of the Baltimore & Ohio, and would give up his attempt to get hold of the Northern Pacific. The speculators wanted to know the truth of the matter and Crawford Livingston was selected to find out. He invited Mr. Hill to a shooting party at his country place and when conversing on the financial outlook, said:

"Mr. Hill, I am a little hard up and have got to realize on some of my stock. I have some Northern Pacific and some Baltimore & Ohio. Which had I better sell?"

Mr. Hill gazed solemnly at Mr. Livingstone for a moment and then a merry twinkle crept into his little bright eyes. He opened his mouth and drawled out:

"If you take my advice, Livingstone, you will sell half of each."

The Crookston Times had a bid in for the job work at the meeting of our board of county commissioners this week. The Times got a smell of the good things in the Red Lake County crib last fall when the Courier of this city sent them an order for the county ballots and other work that could have been better done at home. The chickens are coming home to roost. The county orders will not come C. O. D., however.

The Great Northern road will soon have completed and ready for traffic a new kind of sleeping car that has been under consideration for some time. In the construction of the new car it has been planned to lessen the danger of contagion by disposing with upholstering, as far as possible. As designed these cars will be furnished with rattan seats, covered with wash cloth, which will be changed by the porter each day, and every part of the car will be constructed so as to permit of thorough cleansing every day.

High School Items

—Edited by—
Fred Richards, Della Toupin and Bessie Hunt.

There are a number of new pupils in the lower grades.

Mr. Whiteley was unable to be on duty Monday morning.

Monday everybody was present and ready for work, after two weeks' vacation.

Lee Healy and Maud Champlain, who attend the Morris and Grand Forks High Schools, respectively, visited at the school Monday morning.

Wednesday about noon almost all the pupils of the High School caught a terrible cold and coughed for about fifteen minutes and cut the noon hour fifteen minutes short.

Several new pupils entered the High School after the holiday vacation. Dora Marchand entered the Freshman class, Tillie Mathies, entered the Junior class, and Carl Schusser, the Sophomore class.

The High School Organization's new piano was taken to the High School rooms Wednesday, and the organ, which was formerly there, was taken to the grammar room. The pupils in both rooms were delighted with their new instruments and showed their delight by putting them to use.

At a meeting of the H. S. O. Wednesday morning, the school accepted the decision of the Board of Education in regard to the piano. It was then agreed to arrange an elaborate musical program for its ratification, which will occur Friday evening, Jan. 18. At that time the piano will be formerly presented by the H. S. O. to the school district.

The Grand Forks Herald says that it is understood that quite a sensation may be sprung in the near future over some of the schemes for a division in Polk county. It is claimed by some that others have not trotted fair and if this is proven to be the case a royal old fuss will be stirred up.

Up to the beginning of December the British in South Africa had lost 3,018 men killed, 13,886 wounded, and 7,786 dead from disease or wounds. There were in hospital 11,927 and 35,548 soldiers sick or wounded who had been sent home. Add to this the estimated financial cost of the war to the same date ($600,000,000) and it will be seen England is paying dear for empire in the land of the Boers.

The 'Cross Lakers are a band who have held aloof from the white man and his seductive ways, living in seclusion north of the narrows of the lake, and it will be remembered at first strenuously objected to the building of the school-house, which is a finer one than four fifths of the white children ever enter.

Vic's Letter.

Calamba, P. I., Nov. 26, 1900.

To The Gazette:

It is with pleasure that I will take a few moments to drop your readers a few lines to tell them how we are getting along in this part of the globe.

I am now in a new part of the island of Luzon. We are stationed at this place, eleven engineer corps men under the charge of one officer of engineers. There is a lot of work to do here, as the roads are in very bad condition and the civil commission has put aside a lot of money for this purpose.

I had a light fever when we started for this place, and having a little work on hand, soon got over-heated, and finally when we reached the lake or Bay, the lake being so rough that it was feared our boat would sink, I got sea sick, along with my fever. When we reached land I was in such a condition that I was sent to the hospital, and have now been here for seven days. I am considerable better now and expect that it will not be long before I will be on duty. The hospital is very crowded, and although a great many are sent to Manilla for treatment, the hospital is always full.

The murderers of Archie Wilson, who was murdered a short time back, have been caught and I fear another hanging-bee will soon take place. Six men are implicated in the case and undoubtly a couple will have to hang to punish the guilty one.

This is how the Filipino dresses: "The Filipino on parade is a natural dude. His hat is of plaited and often variously colored straw; his shirt or camisa of light, transparent material, often checked, cut Prince Albert and left outside his trousers. Under this he wears an undershirt, generally brilliant parti-colored. His trousers are of white drill, very tight around the waist, and absurdly wide at the knee, narrowing again toward the bottoms. Where we wear a buckle behind, he has a bow-knot. His socks are either white, buff or of a barber pole pattern, and his shoes, generally white canvass Oxfords, with leather tips and a wealth of leather fancy work, are at least two sizes too big for him. On Sundays or at funerals, battered 'dicers' of various colors, generally dusty black, and most astonishing shapes, take the place of straw hats, while the Oxfords are replaced by awkward black shoes to which polish is unknown."

This is all for this time.

DONNELLY IS DEAD

SAGE OF NININGER EXPIRES SUDDENLY AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Apparently in His Usual Health Until a Few Hours Before the End Came. Deceased a Resident of Minnesota for Forty Years, but Was Nationally Famous as an Author and Orator.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 3.—Ignatius Donnelly, world famous as an author, nationally famous as an orator, and a figure in the political affairs of his country for over 40 years, died suddenly at midnight at the home of his father-in-law, Martin Hanson, 302 Eighteenth avenue south Minneapolis.

Mr. Donnelly had been apparently in good health for a man of his years and left his country home at Nininger, near Hastings, where he has lived since 1856, about noon to go to Minneapolis to read some proof sheets on his paper.

About 9 o'clock in the evening he was taken ill and at midnight he died.

MR. DONNELLY'S CAREER.

Was Identified With Minnesota's History for Over Forty Years.

Ignatius Donnelly has taken a position in American literature almost preeminent for its versatility and for the iconoclastic disregard of old traditions, literary or economic, which he exhibited in his writings.

Born in Philadelphia Nov. 5, 1831, he was educated in the public schools and studied law, but shortly after his admission, at the age of 27, he removed to Minnesota. This was in 1857. He rapidly took a front rank at the bar of the then territory and when the first election under statehood was held he was the nominee of the Republican party for lieutenant governor. In 1861 he was re-elected and at the next election he was sent to congress from the then Second district, which he represented during the days of reconstruction.

On locating at Nininger, Dakota county, in 1857, he had established a weekly paper, mainly devoted to the encouragement of immigration, and on his return from congress he again although retaining an active interest in affairs politically. From 1874 to 1878 he was state senator, and his wide knowledge and keen wit made him even more feared in the state forum than he had been in the national.

Devoted Himself to Literary Pursuits,

With the advent of the Farmers' Alliance in the early 80's and the subsequent development of the originally non-partisan body into an effective factor in the politics of Minnesota, Mr. Donnelly was an eminent factor.

In 1887 he was returned to the house of representatives, and in 1891 to the state senate, where he was the central figure in a series of debates such as have not been heard there since. His last political service was in 1897 as a member of the state house of representatives.

He was several times nominated for governor of Minnesota, but failed of election, and last year he was the nominee of the Mid-Road Populists for the national vice presidency.

Was a Merciless Debater.

Keen in perception and marvelously ready to reply, Mr. Donnelly was, perhaps, the most merciless of all the debaters who have ever sat in the legislature of his state, while in the national congress he demonstrated to colleagues that the then frontier had no apologies to ask in comparative ability of its older neighbors in the sisterhood of states.

Gifted with a memory almost marvelous, an indefatigable reader and with all the wealth of poetry that a long line of Irish ancestry could give him, his orations were almost faultless in diction, and in his powers as an orator he was always as forceful and as facile as with his pen. His lectures bristled with wit and glistened with humor; his impromptu addresses were apt and always interesting.

For several years Mr. Donnelly had been proprietor and chief editor of a weekly paper, The Representative, and the story of his death received indicate that he died almost in the literary harness.

P. D. ARMOUR DEAD.

Chicago's Millionaire Pork Packer Expires After a Long Illness.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—Philip D. Armour died at his residence on Prairie avenue in this city at 5:45 o'clock. A muscular affection of the heart, known to the medical profession as myocarditis, was the immediate cause of his death.

The end came after two years of illness, during which time Mr. Armour visited German baths, passed the cold months in Southern California and devoted himself largely to an attempt to restore his health, which, however, had been broken never to be regained.

Estimates of Mr. Armour's own estate ran from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000. This of course does not include the $12,000,000 or $20,000,000 owned by the younger members of his family. For years every enterprise he was interested in has been making immense profits. His holdings of stock have all advanced largely during the last three years.

BATCHELDER DEAD.

Was Formerly Quartermaster General of the Army.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—General R. N. Batchelder, former quartermaster general of the army, died here at 3:35 p. m. General Batchelder had been in delicate health for several years past, but his illness did not assume a critical phase until just before the holidays, when he suffered from an attack of angina pectoris. Interment will be made at Arlington cemetery Monday after services in All Souls Unitarian church at 10:30 in the morning.

SUGAR BOUNTY LAW VOID.

State Cannot Tax People to Aid Private Enterprises.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 3.—In exercising a prerogative rarely used by an attorney general the Minnesota beet sugar bounty law of 1895 was declared invalid in an opinion rendered by Attorney General Douglas, at the request of State Auditor R. C. Dunn. A decision on the law was made necessary by the state auditor's refusal to issue a warrant due to the Minnesota Beet Sugar company under a law of 1895, for sugar manufactured during 1900.

The opinion holds that the funds appropriated for sugar bounties are raised by taxation and that since a direct tax to meet the bounty cannot be maintained, public funds cannot be devoted for it. The power of the legislature to aid a private enterprise is held to be properly determined by this rule. The opinion follows a long line of supreme court decisions of many states.

SMALLPOX IN MANY PLACES.

Dr. Bracken Reports on the Situation in Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 4.—Without wishing to cause any alarm, Secretary Bracken of the state board of health admits that the number of cases of smallpox throughout the state and reported to his office in the past two weeks is large. Thirty-eight villages and cities and thirty-three townships in as many counties are credited with epidemics, while the cases in quarantine outside the Twin Cities, St. Louis county and Winona number 172. The state department is as closely in touch with the disease as the local boards of health, weekly and daily reports being received, while correspondence and clipping bureaus keep the office posted on any infection that may be feared from neighboring states.

TELEGRAPHERS SATISFIED.

Their Principal Requests Are Granted by the Northern Pacific.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 8.—The grievance committee of the Northern Pacific telegraphers has issued a statement saying that their negotiations with the officials are concluded, and that they are well satisfied with the results.

The committee states that no strike will occur. The company has agreed that every operator, day and night, shall have eight consecutive hours' rest. In the relay offices from Duluth to the coast hours have been reduced from nine to eight and a half. The request for recognition as an organization was not granted, and the question of an increase in wages was not favorably considered.

MAY LEASE THE ST. PAUL.

Latest Rumor Affecting Great Northern and Northern Pacific.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—It was reported in Wall street on Monday and since repeated in various clubs where financial men resort, that the announcement to be made in connection with the railroad situation of the Northwest involves the proposition of no less importance than the leasing of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad jointly by the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific companies, the two roads guaranteeing dividends at some rate not yet mentioned on the St. Paul common and preferred stock.

RELEASED MANY SLAVES.

Death of James Richards, Prominent Before the Civil War.

DULUTH, Jan. 5.—James Richards, aged 82, died here during the day. He went from Massachusetts to Cleveland, O., in 1840 and took a prominent part in anti-slavery matters before the Civil war, and was identified with what was known as the underground railway system of getting slaves out of the slave states. Mr. Richards once owned a farm on the site of Wade Park, Cleveland, and sold it to the city for a large sum about 12 years ago.

NO HOPE OF RECOVERY.

Twelve Persons Dying In Nicollet County, Minn., From Trichinae Poisoning.

ST. PETER, Minn., Jan. 5.—An entire family named Ferbecook, in the town of New Sweden, Nicollet county, are said to be dying from trichinae poison. The father and eldest daughter have died, the former Monday night and the latter last Saturday.

There are 12 members of the family, and the surviving 10 are all afflicted with the malady and physicians have abandoned all hope of their recovery.

SMALLPOX TRAGEDY.

Lumberman Killed While Attempting to Escape Quarantine.

SPARTA, Minn., Jan. 5.—A case of smallpox has been discovered in the Northern Lumber company's logging camp three miles from town, in which 100 men are employed. A force of 20 men is guarding the camp. A lumberman named John Swanson, while attempting to escape quarantine, was shot by a deputy and instantly killed.

Pioneer Newspaper Man Dead.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 8.—Orville Brown, a pioneer resident of Minnesota, died at the home of his son in this city. Mr. Brown was born in New York and came to Minnesota in 1855. He published the Chatfield Republican for some years and later the Faribault Republican and the Mankato Record.

Shows a Large Increase.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 3.—The receipts of the St. Paul postoffice for 1900 from sale of stamps, waste paper and box rents were $51,362.90, $20,241.64 more than for 1899. There was a slight decrease in box rents and almost no increase in the receipts from waste paper, the gain being entirely in the sale of stamps.

Aged Man Frozen to Death.

AUSTIN, Minn., Jan. 8.—James H. Rochford, over 70 years old and an old settler of this vicinity, was found frozen to death in a field three miles west of this city. His body had lain there for over a week.

WYLIE GAZETTE.

Edited by H. P. JOHNSON, WYLIE, MINN.

A department devoted to the interests of Wylie and the district tributary. Subscriptions received by H. P. Johnson.

As the nineteenth century sends its last breeze over us. we probably looked back through its history, from the dawn of those hundred years past. The beginning of that period of precious time was terrible. The awful French Revolution with its dreadful bloodscenes, has painted the cheeks of its infancy, red, as it then drowned all the world in blood. It seemed as if all the powers of Europe would dash together in chaos. Germany, torn and humiliated was bleeding from deep wounds. Sweden lost Finland. United Europe at last succeeded in setting a limit to the ambitious Napoleon, and compelled exhausted France to a peaceful slumber, as the darkness was spread over it from the historic plains of Waterloo. The Holy Alliance, organized by the war-fatigued monarchies of Europe, was as a sun rising in the horizon as dawn of the peace of the world.

We must say that there have been fewer and less bloody wars during the past century than any prior: although equipments have been far more extravagent, and all nations now have standing armies of a before not imagined size. Since the Napoleon wars ceased the following have been the principle: The Greek of 1825; Crimea, 1854-56; The uproar in India: Civil War 1860-64: Slesvig-Holstien war 1864: German-French 1870-71: Russian-Turkey 1876. To these may be added the Spanish American War, and that between Japan and China.

As the new century dawns, we see the world-wars continuing from the past into the present, and expect it to claim its desolating practice in the future. When shall that century dawn, when peace entirely shall reign?

Great Britain's Only Gold Mine.

Up in an obscure corner of north Wales the only gold mine in the United Kingdom is being worked. It is known as St. David's. Here a profitable plant covering 730 acres is in active operation. Eight or nine lodes outcrop on the property, three of which have been tapped. One of the "reefs" averages 7½ feet in width, another 2½ feet and the broadest of the trio 5 feet. The total results from all sources show a recovery of 14½ pennyweights gold per ton of ore, and the total cost of mining, milling and concentration is placed at the extremely low figure of 8 shillings a ton. The use of water power and the hydraulic mining system combined with a low wage scale enable this abnormally cheap cost of production, and the £60,000 of the company's capital stock is paying out dividends of 8 shillings a share. The St. David's mine is said to be still undiscovered as far as its ultimate possibilities are concerned.—Chicago Record.

Chinamen in Hawaii.

A Honolulu correspondent of the Boston Transcript writes: "John Chinaman is an entirely different person in Hawaii from what he is in California. Those who know him only on the Pacific slope do not know him at all. There he is a despised menial, outside the pale of society, abused and tolerated because he can't be wholly got rid of. In these favored isles he is a man among men, the faithful and trusted servant and often occupies important places in public affairs. He is welcomed to any society for which he has fitted himself. And so well has he improved the exceptional opportunities that have come to him in Hawaii that he is sometimes able to grace the most select social functions. Last week I attended a reception at Oahu college, given to the new president and his wife. There, among the elite of the city, I saw Chinese and Japanese men and women, some in their national costumes."

Escaped the Gallows.

A year ago Judge Montgomery of West Virginia sentenced Lud Madison, colored, to be hanged Jan. 14 in the state penitentiary at Moundsville for the murder of another negro. Two days before the date of the execution Governor Atkinson issued a respite for nine days. The judge who sentenced him died before the reprieve expired. Two weeks ago Madison's case was forced on the authorities by a report of it to Governor Atkinson. The governor decided that, the judge being dead and the time for resentence having passed, no one can now resentence Madison. The date of legal death having passed, Madison cannot be hanged on the original sentence. As he was never sentenced to imprisonment he cannot be kept in the penitentiary, so Madison will probably be released in a few days.

HUMOR OF THE HOUR.

"About three miles from the town," said a traveler, "I came upon a man seated on a log by the roadside. His chin was resting in his hands, his shotgun leaned up against a tree, and he was so busy with his thoughts that he did not see or hear me until I rode up and saluted. Seeing that something was wrong with him, I asked the cause, and he got up and came out to me and replied:

"'Stranger, I've bin havin a lawsuit and got beat.'

"'And you ought to have won?' I said.

"'I had. The case was as clear as noonday. I sold a feller a mewl fur $40, and he paid me $25 down and bucked the balance. I orter had a verdict as suah as shootin.'

"'Well, the law is uncertain.'

"'I reckon it is. The suit was decided ag'in me yisterday. I went home and got my gun and was back in town the fust thing this mawnin, but he had gone.'

"'Who?' I said.

"'The defendant. Couldn't find hide nor ha'r of him. The jedge was also gone. So was the jury. So was the defendant's lawyer. Drat 'em, but they all slipped out and didn't give me no show!'

"'No show for what?'

"'Why, what did I go after my gun fur? What's she loaded with buckshot fur? What am I a-feelin so cast down and broken up about? I was gwine to shute, of co'se, but they wouldn't wait.'

"'Well, you shouldn't take it so to heart,' I said, hoping to console him a bit.

"'It's powerful tuff, fur I was dead right about it,' he answered, as he looked up the road, 'but thar's one little gleam of hope left. The lawyer who had my case is comin along this way this evenin, and I'm a-gwine to hold him under that shotgun till he hands me over the $10 I paid him to talk fur me! Doggone it, but I ain't a-gwine to let the hull bilin lot of 'em git clar off without gittin a shot in on somebody! 'Tain't human natur' and it hain't in the laws of the sovereign state of Arkansas that I should!'"—Washington Post.

Sweden in Difficulty.

Hard times and scarcity of money are reported in Sweden. That kingdom is indeed in an unfortunate plight. Russia is rushing Cossacks into spoliated Finland and making scarcely disguised preparations to push her conquests westward so as to include Norrland if not the whole of the Scandinavian peninsula and at the same time is stirring up trouble and hostility in the sister kingdom of Norway. Thus Sweden is compelled to strain every nerve and spend every crown to prepare for a life or death struggle on her borders. The result is industrial unrest and lack of confidence and scarcity of means for the legitimate pursuits of peace.—New York Tribune.

Siberian Railway Hard to Build.

The difficulties of construction of the Transsiberian railway, especially in central Siberia, were enormous, and no contractor could be found ready to accept the responsibility, so that the work has been done almost entirely by the state engineers. Temperatures of 50 degrees centigrade were not infrequently observed in winter, and often the ballast had to be quarried at spots 25 miles away from the route. Some of the most formidable obstacles encountered were the virgin forests of tall firs through which the route had to be cut.—London Sphere.

EIGHT MET DEATH

MINNEAPOLIS LODGING HOUSE IS DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Of the Twenty-seven Inmates Nineteen Managed to Escape but the Others Were Overcome by Smoke and Suffocated—Produce Exchange Illegal—Chicago Great Western Wreck.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 7.—Eight men lost their lives in the fire at 115 Washington avenue south Sunday morning. The men were overcome by smoke in the Harvard hotel, which occupies the second, third and fourth floors of the building, and death in every instance was due to suffocation.

The dead are Nathaniel Perley, C. J. Skidmore, J. S. Bentley, B. Scofield, George Rudey, Michael Monahan and —— Jacobson all of Minneapolis, and J. N. Erickson of Alexandria, Minn.

When the men were found in various parts of the house Erickson was dead, the others unconscious, and all in such condition that there was no hope of resuscitating any except possibly Jacobson. He died at noon at the city hospital.

That there was a fire in the building was first discovered by Charles Hanson, as he was about to go to his room on the second floor. There was then smoke in the hallway and he immediately alarmed George O'Connor, the night clerk and the two men set about to awaken the lodgers.

Forced to Retreat.

Hanson devoted his attention to the second floor, and O'Connor rushed up stairs. It was then about 1:45 o'clock and the lodgers were all asleep, and it was with the greatest difficulty they were aroused. In several instances it was necessary for O'Connor to break in doors. In the meantime he kept crying "fire," and the alarm soon spread. O'Connor was finally forced to beat a retreat because of the smoke.

It was a case of every man fighting for his own life. Nineteen of the 27 lodgers were successful, but the others were unable to break their way through the thick smoke and succumbed.

The fire which ended with such great loss of life at first was insignificant and even for several minutes after the fire department arrived at the scene the real danger was not fully appreciated. The fire had its origin in the rear store, and under a stairway that led up to the second floor. There was a considerable amount of oils and varnish here to Feed The Flames.

The fire burst out at the rear, and to this part of the building the department directed its attention. Only a small volume of smoke was at the time issuing from the front windows of the store and very little from the upper windows.

The loss of life might have been entirely averted had it not been for the fact that immediately above the stairs was a 45 gallon tank of kerosene. When the flames reached this there was one big puff of smoke and it was this that spread throughout the hotel portion of the building. The smoke was white and very thick.

The death list makes the fire next to the worst in the history of Minneapolis. In the mill fire in 1878 18 lives were lost, and up to Sunday, The Tribune fire of 11 years ago held the second mortuary record. In that fire seven lives were lost, which is exceeded by one, in the Harvard hotel fire.

ILLEGAL COMBINATION.

Minneapolis Produce Exchange So Held by the Supreme Court.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 8.—The supreme court, in a decision written by Justice Lovely, declares the Minneapolis Produce Exchange to be a combination in restraint of trade, prohibited by chapter 359, General Laws of 1899. The action against the corporation was brought by Conrad J. Ertz, who was not a member.

The findings of the court are that the organization regulates the credit to be allowed its members, discriminates in the price to be paid for produce, controls the delivery of goods and provides fines and penalties for offending and defaulting members. Upon these findings the court holds that besides restraining trade, the corporation tends to limit and control the market price of produce and limits and interferes with the free and open purchase and sale of commodities, offending against the law cited.

Chicago Great Western Passenger Train Wrecked Near Sargent, Minn.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 5.—The Chicago Great Western passenger train from Chicago, due in St. Paul at 7:45 a. m., was wrecked near Sargent, Minn., about 5 o'clock. No one was seriously injured.

The train consisted of eight cars, and was drawn by two engines. A few miles out of Sargent the train gained a speed of about 30 miles an hour, and the second engine struck a defective rail, which immediately broke. The forward engine had passed safely over.

In the crash which followed, the baggage car left the track and was demolished, the wreckage catching fire and destroying car and contents. The other seven cars also left the track, but did not turn over, and no one was injured except Buffet Car Attendant Hudson, Baggage Agent Green and Conductor Healey, all of whom were bruised and somewhat cut.

A great many farmers in the southern part of the State are feeding straw sprinkled with low grade flour. This makes an excellent feed for cattle, because in this way cattle will eat the straw up clean. If you are short of hay try this feed. We will sell you a low grade flour at $18.00 per ton in ton lots. A ton of this flour and two tons of straw are equal in feeding qualities to three tons of hay.

We also have ground corn, whole corn and ground feed for sale at very low prices.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Plans For Enlarging White House. Question of Social Precedence. Count Cassini Returns.

[Special Correspondence.]

The commission authorized at the last session of congress to consider the question of enlarging the official residence of the chief executive has decided to recommend the plans originally suggested by the late Mrs. Benjamin Harrison.

The report of the commission is practically completed, and the drawings have been penciled out, so that the result of its deliberations will be ready for presentation to the committee on public buildings and grounds when congress convenes in December. Accompanying the report will be a plaster model of the present building and the proposed extension, which will be finished in time to be exhibited at the Washington centennial celebration in this city on Dec. 4.

The work of the commission was not accomplished without considerable outside opposition, notably from certain architects anxious to supply designs for the extension of the historic mansion.

There is another element of opposition which threatens to make itself felt when the question of appropriations comes before congress. It is a combination of citizens who own desirable property on Washington heights at the head of Connecticut avenue and Sixteenth street who are anxious to have the official residence of the president permanently located in that vicinity. It is not a new idea to separate the executive office from the president's official home, and many influential persons are interested in trying to bring it about.

It is not likely, however, that this generation will witness a change of the president's official residence from its present location. There is no doubt of the necessity for more liberal accommodations for the president, his family and his official staff. The subject has been agitated for several years, and the consensus of opinion seems to be in favor of enlarging the present building and preserving the outlines of the original structure.

Question of Social Precedence.

Social precedence is to be a burning issue this winter. President McKinley has been the court of last resort in the troublesome problem which nearly disrupted official society last winter. He has practically adopted the solution suggested last year—that is, to make a distinct class of the heads of the three divisions of our government—the executive, the judiciary and the legislative—and to give them precedence on all official occasions. This class would under ordinary circumstance comprise five people, the president and vice president, the chief justice, the president pro tem. of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives.

Colonel Theodore A. Bingham, U. S. A., superintendent of public buildings, has among his multitudinous duties the task of gathering together all precedents which might apply to such cases, and the president's first leisure moments when he returns to the capital will be expended in examining these points. The controversy between the army and navy regarding the supremacy of Admiral Dewey over Major General Miles is also a live issue and bids fair to develop some lively points before the season is over.

Count Cassini Returns.

The Russian embassador, Count Cassini, has returned to Washington after an absence of some months in Europe, during which time he had the opportunity of visiting St. Petersburg and conferring with Count Lamsdorf, Russian minister of foreign affairs, concerning Chinese affairs and other international questions which have engaged attention of late. Count Cassini also spent some time in Paris, where he talked with M. Delcasse, the French minister of foreign affairs.

When seen at the embassy, Count Cassini said that his visit to St. Petersburg was more than two months ago, so that he was not in touch with the latest phases of the China situation, and was not yet in a position to discuss them. But he spoke informally on some of the events which have arisen and the course which Russia has pursued.

A test was made in the model tank at the Washington navy yard of a model of a new type of torpedo boat. The vessel is a combination of some of the features of the submarine boats and ordinary torpedo craft. All the vitals are below the water line, and the small surface of the vessel showing above the water is protected by cellulose, a material which expands on contact with liquids and stops leaks. The test was very favorable to the invention, the only objectionable features being the low speed developed, 14 knots, and a very perceptible wake. It is claimed that the vessel can be seen only at close quarters. There will probably be another test after an attempt has been made to so rearrange the boat as to meet the objections made by the naval experts. The inventor is a New York man named Berger.

Now comes the official news that the Spanish cabinet has caused the issue of a warrant for the arrest of its minister plenipotentiary to the republic of Chile, Don Lopez Guijarro, who has disappeared after misappropriating not only government funds, but likewise large sums which had come into his hands for Spanish subjects as the official representative of Spain. It is believed that he has fled to the United States, and steps have been taken to request his extradition, the Madrid government being determined to run him to earth and to inflict a more severe penalty upon him than that of mere dismissal.

TRIBUTE TO DAVIS

SENATORS EULOGIZE THE DECEASED MINNESOTAN.

Nelson, Hoar, Lodge and Others Included in the List of Speakers—Duluth Docks to Be Raised—A. B. Stickney Weds—Drop in Price of Twine—State News in General.

Washington, Jan. 13.—No legislative business of importance was transacted by the senate. The session was devoted to services held in memory of the late Cushman K. Davis of Minnesota. The long and distinguished services of the Minnesota senator and the intimate relations he sustained to his colleagues in the senate had endeared him to all and when his demise came every member of the body felt that he had suffered a personal loss. For many years Mr. Davis served as chairman of the committee on foreign relations and in that capacity and in the capacity of member of the Paris peace commission he was intimately identified with the foreign affairs of the government.

Immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, Mr. Nelson (Minn.) called up his resolution expressive of the regret of the senate at the death of Senator Davis. As Mr. Nelson called up the resolution Mrs. Davis, accompanied by some friends, entered the executive gallery of the senate.

Mr. Nelson the First Speaker.

Mr. Nelson, the colleague of the late Senator Davis, was the first speaker. He began by touching upon the history of the deceased senator, saying that he died at a time when in the full maturity of his great mental vigor, at a time when he was better equipped than ever to serve his country and at a time when his country stood in the greatest need of his services. Continuing, Senator Nelson said:

"To trace his life, the development of his vigorous mind and its wonderful resources from youth to manhood, from a great lawyer to a profound statesman and leader, is to scan a human epic, marvelous and inspiring in its progress, and grand and enduring in its results and outcome. He was equipped with a mind of the first order, eager, thirsty and searching. In his youth he was a most ardent student, to whom his lessons were but the doorsteps to the sanctuary of knowledge, which he was ever exploring. He became a devouring student of history, philosophy and poetry at a time when most youths are tethered in their arithmetics, their grammar and their geographies."

Trained in Diplomacy and Statecraft.

Mr. Nelson paid a tribute to the profundity of the knowledge of his colleague and the distinguished position he occupied in the Spanish war debates and conferences and said:

"He exhausted and rendered clear and lucid the most profound and intricate problems of diplomacy and statecraft. When he had spoken, there was little if anything more to bear on the subject."

Mr. Nelson paid a tribute to the literary accomplishment of his late colleague and closed with an apostrophe to American manhood as represented by Mr. Davis.

Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts, commenting upon the fact that so many senators die in office, said that in the eulogies pronounced in the chamber the portraitures have been true and faithful. In a young republic, he said, the greatest place for a live man was that of a soldier in time of war and a statesman in time of peace. Mr. Davis was both. He did a man's full duty in both.

Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts analyzed the character of Mr. Davis, as from the closest personal friendship, and said the late senator was not fully appreciated as a public man.

WILL RAISE DOCKS.

Engineering Feat Planned by Iron Range Road.

Duluth, Jan. 12.—President Greatsinger, Chief Engineer Angst and Superintendent McGonagle of the Iron Range road have been in consultation for some days over the improvements to be made this winter at the road's terminals, and plans for the reconstruction of docks 3 and 4 are now in the hands of contractors. From 200 to 400 men will be employed in the work, which will take from now till well into the spring. Both docks will be raised bodily, one six feet, the other nine. As they are a quarter of a mile long, 50 feet wide and more than 50 feet high above water, the task will be a difficult engineering feat.

Contractors After Their Pay.

Redwood Falls, Minn., Jan. 10.—Michael King of Des Moines, the contractor who finished the grading on the Gulf and Manitoba line constructed from Beaver Falls to the Minneapolis and St. Louis tracks, near this city, has been here to place a lien on the right of way to secure his pay for the work. John Graham of Minneapolis had already placed a lien on the line for materials furnished.

Base Ball Franchise Transferred.

St. Joseph, Mo., Jan. 10.—The announcement is made that the transfer of the Sioux City Western league base ball franchise was formally made to Minneapolis during the secret session of league representatives in St. Joseph on Tuesday. It is also said the Pueblo franchise will probably be transferred to Sioux City.

Killed in an Assault.

Appleton, Minn., Jan. 11.—Hans Agre and Victor Nelson sought admittance to the house of Matt Janatt. They were refused, and thereupon broke in the windows. Janatt shot and killed Agre and surrendered to the authorities. Nelson is detained as a witness and may be prosecuted.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mississippi River Improvements Discussed in the House.

Washington, Jan. 13.—After routine business had been disposed of the house went into committee of the whole and resumed consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. Mr. Catchings (Miss.), a member of the committee, replied at some length to the attack made by Mr. Hepburn (Ia.) upon the Mississippi river improvements on Thursday. Mr. Catchings said he had indulged the hope that before he retired from congress Mr. Hepburn would have abandoned his antagonism to appropriations for the Mississippi river. "But after listening to his speech on Thursday," said Mr. Catchings, "I find that hope consigned to the limbo where lie the wreckage of the other disappointments of my life."

Proceeding Mr. Catchings denied that the commerce of the Mississippi was disappearing. Its character had vastly changed since the old days, but its volume was as large as ever.

BIG PINE DEAL.

Fifty-five Million Feet of Standing Tree Is Sold.

Duluth, Jan. 14.—The biggest timber deal of the new year in Northern Minnesota was announced during the day. The Hiram W. Sibley tract in Lake county, one of the largest and finest stands of white pine to be found on the north shore of Lake Superior, consisting of 55,000,000 feet, has been sold to Richardson & Avery for a consideration of $270,000. The timber has been held by Mr. Sibley, who is a resident of Rochester, N. Y., for a number of years. People familiar with certain offers made for the pine two years ago say that Mr. Sibley has earned $100,000 since 1898 by holding onto the timber until now. A logging road will be built and the timber sawed at Duluth.

A. B. STICKNEY WEDS.

Great Western's President Married to Miss May Crosby of Dexter, Me.

Boston, Jan. 8.—Alpheus B. Stickney, president of the Chicago Great Western railway, was quietly married to Miss May Crosby, daughter of Judge Josiah Crosby of Dexter, Me., at the home of Rev. Thomas Vanness in Brookline. There were no bridesmaid, maid of honor nor best man. The ceremony was simple in every respect and the bride was given away by her father. Mr. and Mrs. Stickney will go in a few days to New York for a brief visit. After the New York sojourn a Mediterranean trip is contemplated.

COLONEL BAASEN DEAD.

Minnesota's First Secretary of State a Victim of Gangrene.

Minneapolis, Jan. 11.—Colonel Francis Baasen of New Ulm, assistant adjutant general, died at the soldiers' home hospital from gangrene. At the beginning of the Civil war Colonel Baasen enlisted as a private in the old First Minnesota, was promoted to first lieutenant and became quartermaster of the regiment, serving with it until the regiment was mustered out of service. When the Territory of Minnesota was admitted into the Union as a state he became its first secretary of state.

WOULD BENEFIT INDIANS.

Captain Mercer Wants Chippewa Pine Sold at Private Sale.

Duluth, Jan. 14.—Captain W. A. Mercer of the Leech Lake reservation is in Duluth. He estimates the Chippewa Indians on those lands lose $100,000 annually as a result of deterioration, fires and other causes. He suggests that the pine be sold at private sale and the quantity ascertained by scaling. Captain Mercer estimates that there is 1,000,000,000 feet of pine on the reservation, two-thirds of which should be cut in the near future.

Minneapolis, Jan. 15.—Mrs. Louis Helstrom, the wife of the janitor of the Lincoln Court flats, killed her 16-year-old daughter, crushing her skull with a bottle. There were evidences of a terrific struggle which the girl had made for her life.

Legal Obstacles in the Way.

Milwaukee, Jan. 9.—The Evening Wisconsin prints an interview with its "railway authority," in which it is stated legal obstacles are in the way of a combination of the Great Northern-Northern Pacific-Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul deal. The Wisconsin's informant says there are laws in Minnesota and Dakotas which forbid combinations, leases or other traffic arrangements between and among parallel competing lines which the named railways are.

MICK ECKSTEIN'S STORE DESTROYED BY FIRE FRIDAY MORNING.

The dawn of last Friday morning was illuminated by a brilliant fire when Nick Eckstein's store was going up in flames. The fire originated upstairs, but nothing besides a trunk was saved from that department as when detected, it was filled with smoke. Attempts were immediately made to save what was in the store, and most all was saved. The building was totally destroyed, it was partly covered by insurance. Mr. Eckstien went to Red Lake Falls Saturday to see the insurance man.

VERY OLD TABLETS.

New Light on the Earliest History of the World.

Remarkable Discoveries of Dr. Hilprecht at Nippur—Evidence of Civilization Earlier Than Supposed Time of Adam and Eve.

Prof. H. V. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania, who has been exploring the mountains of ancient Nippur, in Asia Minor, arrived in New York the other morning on the steamer Friedrich der Grosse from Bremen. Prof. Hilprecht brought with him some of the tablets marked with cuneiform inscriptions, which he recently discovered in an old temple in the ruins of Nippur. These tablets contain records of civilization which existed as long ago as 5000 B.C.—that is, as long before Abraham as Abraham was before our time.

Prof. Hilprecht's coming has been awaited anxiously by students interested in the remote past, because his discoveries are believed to have reorganized the chronology of Biblical times, extending it back many millenniums prior to the old time reckoning of the deluge. Therefore he is looked upon as a messenger bearing news of the earliest records of civilization.

Dr. Hilprecht has been exploring the mounds of ancient Nippur for 11 years. His campaigns have heretofore been most successful, but during the past year he has made the greatest discoveries of all, the finding of the library of the ancient Temple of Nippur and the remains of a huge palace having at least two stories and containing many evidences of what might be called modern conveniences.

The library tablets throw a strong light on how people lived at Nippur at the time when Adam and Eve were supposed to be living in the Garden of Eden. Some of the tablets are dictionaries, architectural plans, building lists, grammatical exercises, contracts, bills of sale, histories and chronological lists, and not only do they form a complete record of the times but they indicate that the civilization then existing was many thousands of years old. They supply many gaps which are known to exist in Genesis; they turn light on the origin of the Jews and the Jewish religion, and they are wonderfully corroborative of the facts outlined in the Old Testament.

"The chief point to be remarked," said the professor the other morning, "is that we have found the first Babylonian temple library that was ever discovered. Hitherto we have possessed nothing more than knowledge of the probable contents of such a library, from copies found in the royal library of Ashurbanapal, in Nineveh, which was discovered 60 years ago."

ONE HORSE RESCUES ANOTHER

Plunges in and Tows to Land Blind Animal Struggling in Water.

A blind horse was rescued from a watery grave the other day by another horse. The blind horse wandered into a mill pond at Mountain Grove, W. Va., and soon got beyond his depth, when he began swimming around in a circle, unable to land. His distress attracted a horse which belongs to Postmaster C. Z. Herner to the water's edge, and he tried by neighing to direct the blind horse to shore. Failing in this, he plunged into the water and swam out into the deep pool to the distressed animal's relief, which was accomplished in the unique way of seizing its foretop and towing the quadruped safely to terra firma, amid the cheers of upward of 100 persons who had become spectators.

The subject for the debate was: "Resolved that the railroads should be owned by the government." The debate was, all through, full of animation, wit and humor, and its climax was a marvelous display of eloquence. Discussion rendered in favor of the negative side. An excellent paper was read. The attendance was larger than expected and the success of the evenings' program will have a stimulating effect on future programs.

PLAN YALE BI-CENTENNIAL.

College Will Hold Elaborate Celebration November 20 to 23.

President Hadley and the members of the Yale faculty announced the other night that the plans for the bicentennial celebration of Yale on November 20, 21, 22 and 23 were about completed and that Yale is to have a celebration in which the graduates and undergraduates will take prominent parts.

The most important announcement in connection with the celebration is that by the finance committee. This committee has been occupied with collecting funds primarily for the purpose of erecting the new memorial buildings on Grove and College streets. The total amount of subscriptions up to October 26, 1901, is $603,474.79. Of this amount $241,009.81 has been paid for land on which to erect the buildings, while $98,110 is assigned by the donors to special purposes.

A total of $252,454.00 has been paid out for site, plans and construction to date. Three additional subscriptions of $100,000 each have been made on condition that three other subscriptions of similar amount are secured.

One of the gentlemen making this conditional promise has made one-half of his gift outright, so that the total amount definitely in sight at present may be increased by $50,000, that is raised to $653,474.79.

The number of subscribers to the bicentennial fund is 607.

TOD SLOAN NETTLED.

Declares He Will Ride in English Races, However—London Field Deplores Presence of Yankees at Newmarket Track.

Tod Sloan's temper is seriously ruffled by the loss of his engagement with the prince of Wales, says a London dispatch to the New York World.

"Have you been notified that you will not be retained by the prince of Wales?" the jockey was asked.

"No, but I guess it's true, all the same," was Sloan's reply. "The feeling that has been stirred up against American jockeys here by some of the swells and sporting papers is the worst I ever knew. The prince could not stand against it, I suppose, and I say nothing against him."

"Do you intend to give up racing here?"

"I don't intend to do anything of the kind. I have still as many offers to ride from the best owners as I want. I ride fair, do my best every time and am not beaten yet. You can tell them that in New York."

Marsh, the prince of Wales' trainer, furnished information before it was communicated to Sloan, and the prince, it is said, has rebuked him for it. Despite Sloan's confidence in himself, this cancelling of the prince of Wales' engagement is considered the worst blow he has received, as other owners will surely follow suit.

The London Field gives prominence to a letter dealing with Lord Durham's charges against American jockeys, in which the writer regretfully chronicles the complete Americanizing of Newmarket. After saying that he agrees with Lord Durham, the writer adds:

"The rank and file of American visitors are an unmitigated nuisance. Visit Newmarket any morning and what do you see? Buckboards and buggies in place of English traps, American women with two-colored hair and the complexion of a French clown, the American jockey and his entourage of hangers-on; and, worse than all, a huge sprinkling of unattached American loafers, who claim they are friends of the trainers and jockeys, but who in reality are gamblers and limbers of the worst type, who have merely sought to find on the English race course a Tom Tiddler's ground where they will not be interfered with by police, to whom they are not known—in fact, Americans during the present season have almost dominated Newmarket. It is English money they have come after, and many of them are not very scrupulous how they get it."

Nerve Influence

Is the subtle force which controls the different organs of the body. It makes them strong or weak, healthy or diseased, according as the brain and nerves are strong and vigorous or weak and diseased. Weak nerves cause headache, nervousness, neuralgia, indigestion, heart trouble and many other forms of chronic weakness. Make the nerves strong, the brain clear and active and the body will be healthy and vigorous.

"For some years I was troubled with nervousness and pain at the base of the brain. My head often felt as though it was in a vise and was being squeezed. I got so bad I could scarcely sleep at night and my heart would palpitate and pain me a great deal. I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and grew steadily stronger until my trouble was entirely removed."

Red Lake Falls Gazette.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER.

—BY—

PHIL. A. KAEPER.

Published weekly, Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Red Lake Falls.

Subscription, $1.00 per Year

☞ All matter for publication in THE GAZETTE must be handed in on or before Tuesday [illegible].

MUST WAKE UP.

Red Lake Falls needs a shaking up. For practically two years we have been at a stand-still, while one opportunity after another has been slipping from us. If this condition of things is allowed to continue we will, in a few years, be found at the tail end of the procession of Northern Minnesota cities, when in truth we could lead, if the proper spirit animated our people.

As an illustration, a company at Boston a year ago made overtures to locate a straw stacker factory here. They wanted a proposition from this city, and were inclined to favor this location. No attention whatever was paid to their overtures, and they located at Fargo, organized a stock company, and will readily employ one hundred men. Another like concern with a factory at Maple Bay, and employing forty workmen, has been casting about for a new location, and it is needless to say that this city has made no effort whatsoever to induce the concern to locate here. Our Dugdale correspondent reports this week that they have decided to locate at Crookston. Thus it is that Red Lake Falls misses her opportunities. Is this method to be continued, and if not, what ought to be done?

It does not require much discernment to perceive that the remedy lies in discovering the vulnerable point in the wall obstructing the triumphal progress of this city, and then by concentrated efforts, the scaling of it. We must decide what we need, what we could reasonably expect to get, and then go after it. The Gazette believes we have the natural location, that, everything else being equal, would make a paper mill here a success. Five fundamental essentials are said to be involved in making a paper mill a success, as far as natural facilities are concerned, and these are: Abundance of water power, plenty of spruce and poplar, and good shipping facilities. A paper mill that would at once increase our population a couple of thousand would be something worth a little effort on the part of our people. Such a consummation is not at all without the range of possibility. Imagine such a mill in this city, operated by electric power generated by water power.

Our Board of Trade might well take up this matter, and the quickest and surest way to get in touch with the capitalists interested in paper mills would be to send a personal representative to lay the matter before them, and to show up the undoubted advantages of this location. In this connection we quote from an article recently published in Newspaperdom, and if we could insure the location of such a plant as described therein, by offering a bonus of ten or twenty thousand dollars, we would be doing well. The article follows:

The mills of the Great Northern Paper Company, the largest in the world, began operations about the middle of November. In many respects this enterprise is one of the greatest in the paper trade, or, in fact, in any line of business. In the first place, the location where the mill and a town of 2,500 people now stand was, eighteen months ago, a wilderness. In that period of time an immense dam of solid concrete, 1,200 feet long and 22 feet high, has been built on the Millinocket river. A plant covering seventeen acres of ground has been erected. The mill has been put in full operation, and is now turning out paper at the rate of about 250 tons a day. Had there not been considerable delay in procuring iron work and electrical machinery, the plant would have been finished four or five months earlier.

A new departure in the operation of paper mills is a feature of the Great Northern. It is the practical elimination of shafting, pulleys and belts, and the operation of the machinery by electricity. The company owns between 350,000 and 400,000 acres of timber land, practically a virgin forest. The filtering house has a capacity for storing 12,000,000 gallons of water, enough to supply a city of 200,000 inhabitants. The boilers, dynamos and woodworking machines are build on a stupendous plan, and especially adapted to the uses of this mill.

The town that has sprung up in a night, as it were, will soon be one of the leading ones in the state. A fine hotel, with a capacity of one hundred guests, is being erected, and dwelling houses are going up like magic, reminding one of the boom towns of the West.

High School Items

The Freshmen and Sophomores have begun the study of botany this week.

Ned Taylor resumed his work Tuesday after an illness of six weeks.

The teachers thought that the girls were getting too intimate with eachother, and that a different arrangement of the seating would quiet them down a little. It proves an excellent scheme.

Bessie and William Hunt are absent on account of the death of their grandmother, Mrs. Hemphill.

Etta Gareau, Delia Toupin and Lizzie McNerthney were absent last week on account of illness.

Visitors are invited to inspect our laboratory Friday evening, which will be lighted up for that purpose.

The members of the High School are preparing for Friday's program which is as follows:

PROGRAM.

1. Song—"Calm Was the Night" by Delia M. Toupin, Pauline Nieland, Lulu Fletcher, Eva Marchildon, Marjorie Rodgers, Josie Kaus, Bertha LaFreniere, Lillian Belair.
2. Piano Duet—"The Huguenots," by Eleanor Findeisen and Eva Marchildon.
3. Presentation of Piano by President of H. S. O., Josephine Kaus.
4. Vocal Duet—"Beautiful Moonlight," Delia Toupin, Marjorie Rodgers.
5. Song—"Dream Faces," by Eva Marchildon, Pauline Neiland, Scott C. Hall, and Norman Schreiter.
6. Vocal Solo—by Delia Toupin.
7. Instrumental Duet—"The Horsemen," by Josephine Kaus.
8. Recitation—"The Newsboy's Debt," by Eleanor Findeisen.
9. Vocal Solo—"In the Shadow of the Pines," by Lulu Fletcher.

The public are cordially invited to attend the ratification meeting on Friday night of this week.

The chemistry class witnessed a general experiment, the most difficult and complicated one that they have yet performed: The making of Sulfuric acid ($H_2 So_4$).

The janitor threatened to report some of the girls for dancing in the hallway at the noon hour Wednesday. He said he would have no objection if the girls knew how to dance, but this everlasting hopping around and yelling like Indians is out of the question, in accordance with the rules of the school.

The J. C. C. met Tuesday evening and initiated Rachel Taylor, Katie Coad and Scott Hall. The speech of welcome was made by Eleanor Findeisen, and recitations were made by Pauline Nieland and Etta Hennemuth.

About Paper Mills and Materials.

The Milwaukee Sentinel is authority for the statement that Wisconsin capitalists are interested in six different propositions to build paper and pulp mills. The estimated cost of these mills is $1,200,000, and they will have an output of 210 tons of paper daily.

BIG DEVELOPMENT

SYNDICATE TO EXPEND TWO AND A HALF MILLIONS IN COPPER REGION.

Duluth, Jan. 17, Special to The Gazette.—The Calumet and Hecla Copper Mining Company has obtained a controlling interest from Frederick Weyerhauser, in a hundred thousand acres near Superior, in the copper range, and will expend two and a half millions dollars in its development, work to commence at once.

WILL COMPETE

JIM HILL WILL ENTER INTO A RACE FOR BUSINESS WITH C. P. R'Y.

Toronto, Jan. 17, Special to The Gazette.—All doubt about Hill acquiring interest in the Canadian N. W. thus bringing the Great Northern into active, keen competition with the Canadian Pacific railroad, appears dispelled by the announcement just made that the Crow's Nest Coal Company will immediately increase its capital from one million to two and a half millions, Hill getting one third of the increase. A similar statement was made some time ago and denied, but this announcement is authentic.

SUDDEN DEATH

GOV. MOUNT LEAVES OFFICE ON MONDAY, DIES TODAY.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 17, Special to The Gazette.—James A. Mount, whose term as governor of Indiana expired Monday, died suddenly at the Dennison hotel, of apoplexy. He had just returned from a walk, perfectly well until ten minutes before his death.

A FIZZLE

THIS IS PREDICTED OF REPUBLICAN SENATORIAL CAUCUS FRIDAY.

St. Paul, Jan. 17, Special to The Gazette.—It looks as if the Republican senatorial caucus called for Friday night would be a failure. Many members are finding excuses for absenting themselves. Only two of the leaders, Clapp and Evans, are anxious for a caucus, and will abide by its decision. The others are doubtful.

WILL PASS

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL WILL PASS—VOTE FRIDAY.

Washington, Jan. 17, Special to The Gazette.—A vote on the army reorganization bill will be taken Friday at four o'clock. It will pass. The only conjecture is as to the size of the majority.

FAVORS COMMUTATION.

Representative Eddy Reports the Promised Bill From His Committee.

Washington, Dec. 12.—Congressman Eddy moved in a practical manner today in the matter of fulfilling a promise to his constituents in Northern Minnesota, and at the same time benefiting a large number of homesteaders in other states by reporting from the house committee on public lands a bill allowing homestead settlers to commute their entries. It extends the provisions of the present law to homesteaders who have taken claims under the provision of the "free homes bill."

UP TO DATE

ARE MANAGER SCHREITER AND THE TELEPHONE EXCHANGE.

Manager Schreiter is giving the best that is going, and this is another step in the right direction. There are forty-four instruments now in use in the city, and new orders are constantly being filled. Subscribers can now talk from their offices to points all over the United States.

Died.

HEMPHILL—Wednesday morning Jan. 16, at the residence of her son-in-law, Frank E. Hunt—Mrs. Elizabeth Hemphill in the eighty first year of her life. "Grandma Hemphill" as she was familiarly known to her host of friends in this city and community was one of the oldest residents of this county. A little over one of the four score of her life has been spent in this county. She saw this place without bridges on the rivers, with but one store, and with all the inconveniences of a howling wilderness. Yet something in the place seemed to have a fascination for her as it did for her enterprising son-in-law, Mr. Hunt. Although she had all the opportunities to return to her native state and live in the "City of Brotherly Love" with her daughter, Miss Sadie Hemphill who is one of the formost operators of the Western Union in the city of Philadelphia, yet she refused to be contented any place except here.

Here, as the grand-children came and grew up around her she seemed to feel that her second home was with Mrs. Hunt and the children. For them went out all the fond care of a mother's heart, and to them she gave that unselfish devotion which only a grandmother can know, until her health commenced to fail. Then it was the children commenced to remember all the more vividly what a good mother she had been to them, and how she had cared for all and looked after many of their comforts. It was then that her daughters and son-in-law and her children and grand children gave their care and attention to the dear old soul whom they loved and who had loved them so well.

The last years of her life were years of almost helplessness. Her daughter, Miss Sadie Hemphill, spent much of the time during the summers in the old Hunt residence on the hill, as it is so well known to the people of Red Lake Falls. Last summer she spent quite a while with her mother, and gave her all her time and attention, thus relieving Mrs. Hunt from the constant strain which has been upon her since grandma has been so ill. She returned late in the fall to her place at the "ticker" in the Broad Street office, and over the wires she knew so well came the message of her mother's death, and the return message that Miss Hemphill could not make the more than 1500 miles in time for the funeral which will be held Friday at 1:30 in the Presbyterian church, of which deceased was a member.

There seems a strange sadness in the thought that just as Mr. Hunt and his family had commenced to feel settled in their comfortable and elegant residence on Bottineau Avenue that Grandma should be called to cross that River and enter her eternal home, where she will await the dear ones who shall follow.

In the old home in Lewiston Pa., and in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Gibs, of Mt. Vernon Va., as well as in hundreds of homes and hearts where her love had been felt there will be sadness as this message reaches them. Her children well know now the full meaning of the words "My mother! when I learned that thou wast dead, Say: wast thou conscious of the tears I shed?" And with their tears the dews of sorrow from other hearts will mingle.

"Dying, still slowly dying,
As the hours of night rode by;
She had lain since the light of sunset
Was red on the evening sky,
Till after the middle watches,
As we softly near her trod,
When her soul from its prison fetters
Was loosed by the hand of God."

Louis Weiss was in the city Monday and told of the successful celebration of his silver wedding last Thursday. Mr. and Mrs. Weiss were married twenty-five years ago in Dakota county. Their six children were present at the anniversary celebration, besides a large number of friends.

The annual statement of St. Marys congregation as read last Sunday shows that parish to be in a flourishing condition. Improvements to the extent of a thousand dollars were made during the year, since Rev. Ansgar assumed control, and $140 of old debts paid. It is probable that the coming year will witness the construction of a large addition to the church edifice and other needed improvements. Under Father Ansgar's guidance, St. Mary's congregation is bound to flourish.

Charles T. Grace, of Morris, Minn., who has for three years past been one of the prominent realestate and loan agents of that place, visited our city Thursday of last week and, having found the location highly suitable for his business, decided to locate here and will occupy the building on Main street formerly used as Republican headquarters. Mr. Grace will deal in farm lands, farm and city loans. It was Mr. Grace's first intention to open a land office independently, but a day later the president of the Elwood Land Co. of St. Paul met him and offered the position as manager for the company at this place, which he accepted. The company is well and favorably known throughout Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and other states, and is in position to bring good, practical farmers to this county. All land business will be through the Elwood Land Co., Mr. Grace having reserved his loaning interests independent of the company.

NATIVES HANGED.

General MacArthur Sends Filipinos to the Gallows.

Washington, Jan. 14.—Copies of general orders from the P. I. just received here show that a large number of native Filipinos have been convicted of murder and other crimes and sentenced to be hanged or to long terms of imprisonment. In one case the accused belonged to an organized band, which, under the name of "Guardia de Honor," had for its declared object the killing of peaceful and unsuspecting persons if necessary to gratify either a desire for revenge or a feeling of envy against the rich.

"These inhuman methods," says General MacArthur, "remove all the participants, whether chief or willing follower in the bands, from the pale of the law and place them among that class of cowardly and secret assassins which all civilized men the world over hold to be enemies of mankind."

A native named Vincente Prado established a camp in a strong position difficult of access in the mountainous district near Rosario, in Union province. There he entrenched his camp and erected buildings for a band of armed outlaws which he gathered about him. Recently two Americans were taken into the camp as prisoners and for no assigned reason other than that "they were enemies," they were Ordered to Instant Death.

Shortly afterwards two Igorrotes, a man and a woman, were taken before Prado and charged with being American spies. Without any attempt at proof or form of trial they were ordered to be immediately executed. In both instances Prado personally witnessed the bloody execution of his orders by members of his outlaw band, who used their bolos on the defenseless prisoners.

On another occasion Prado ordered his band to attack and burn the Pueblo of San Jacinto and to arrest and, "if he resisted, kill," the president of Rosario. In pursuance of these orders the president of Rosario and his son were killed and 102 houses destroyed by fire. Prado and his chief outlaw assistants were sentenced to be hanged.

Another native sentenced to be hanged was Pedro Lachica. This man was one of a band of natives who, representing themselves to be policemen, entered at nighttime several houses and by threats and use of firearms induced the natives to come out to surrender. They then tied the arms of the men behind their backs and beat them with bolos and robbed the houses of money, jewelry and other valuables.

BIG PINE DEAL.

Fifty-five Million Feet of Standing Pine Is Sold.

Duluth, Jan. 14.—The biggest timber deal of the new year in Northern Minnesota was announced during the day. The Hiram W. Sibley tract in Lake county, one of the largest and finest stands of white pine to be found on the north shore of Lake Superior, consisting of 55,000,000 feet, has been sold to Richardson & Avery for a consideration of $270,000. The timber has been held by Mr. Sibley, who is a resident of Rochester, N. Y., for a number of years. People familiar with certain offers made for the pine two years ago say that Mr. Sibley has earned $100,000 since 1898 by holding onto the timber until now. A logging road will be built and the timber sawed at Duluth.

HOLDS POLICE AT BAY.

A French Thief Shuts Himself in a Garret and Defies Gendarmes.

Troyes, France, Jan. 14.—At St. Savine Friday a man named Coquard, who was pursued by gendarmes because of many thefts, shut himself in the garret of his house with a quantity of arms and ammunition and threatened to kill any one who approached him. Saturday he wounded two persons and the house has since been besieged by gendarmes and troops. During the afternoon a citizen attempted on his own responsibility to make terms with Coquard, but the latter killed him. The body of the dead man was secured by two citizens under the protection of a company of infantry. The siege continues and the famous Fort Chabrol incident in Paris is recalled.

FROM ANOTHER PLANET.

William A. Eddy Receives Mysterious Electric Signals.

New York, Jan. 14. — William A. Eddy of Bayonne, N. Y., says that since 1892 he has drawn from his kite wire hundreds of electric signals, both regular and irregular, which may have come from some planet and that the signals have been usually in groups of three, regularly timed like a Morse sounder. When the ends of the kite-sustained steel wires are separated by silk strands the sparks jump at 12 second intervals. Then there are mysterious disappearances of all electric action for several minutes. These electric sparks come from a high point in the air not near to the low tension electric currents and live trolly wire.

Granted Strikers' Demands.

Florence, Colo., Jan. 14.—The strike at the Union Gold Extracting company's mill has ended. President Milliken of the company granted the demands of the mill and smelter men's unions for an 8-hour day and a satisfactory wage scale was arranged at a conference between the president and a committee of the union.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900,
By Harold MacGrath.

"Count," he said, laughing, "it seems that the princess gathers lovers as a woolen coat does teasels. Her lovers—there must now be a legion!"

"You lie!" said Hillars, in an oddly suppressed tone. "You know that you lie."

The prince's lips drew to a thin line, but that was all. "Still, who will disprove it?" he asked.

"If you will allow me," said a voice behind us.

We beheld the princess framed in the doorway. There was a pallor and a look of utter weariness in her face. At the sight of her the count uncovered and the prince rose.

"Your arrival is quite timely," said he. "Here are two champions of yours. Come, which do you love?"

A fury sprang to my head, and I said: "You have too much confidence in our patience. I warn you that I have no fear of the sabers back of you."

The same sabers leaped from their scabbards and fell stiffly against their owners' shoulders instinctively.

"Has it come to this," said the princess, a superb scorn in her eyes, "that my honor must needs be defended by strangers and aliens?" For the briefest space her glance plunged into my eyes. She moved toward the prince. "And you, sir, are to be my husband?"

"It is the will of the king," said the prince, a mocking smile on his lips.

How I lusted for his blood!

"And, though my honor is doubtful," went on the woman I loved, "you still would marry me?"

"Your highness," said the prince, with a bow which entailed the sweeping of his hands, "I would marry you were your honor as"—

"What!" roared Hillars in English.

But he was a moment too late. My hands were around the throat of Prince Ernst of Wortumborg, and I was shaking him till his teeth chattered on each other like castanets. Surely I would have throttled him but for the intervention of the count and the cavalrymen. The count swung his arm around my neck, while the cavalrymen, their saber points at Hillars' breast, wrenched loose my hands. I stood glaring at him, panting and furious. He leaned against the table, gasping and coughing. Finally he recovered his composure.

"Count, I was wrong; you were right. These fellows are dangerous."

"I will fight you on any terms!" I fired back at him.

"I shall send you one of my lackeys," he replied. "Take them away, and shoot them if they resist!"

"Liberate the gentlemen," said Gretchen.

The count gazed at her in amazement.

"Liberate them?" he cried.

"I command it."

"You!" said the prince.

"Yes. This is my principality; these are my soldiers. I command here."

This was a coup indeed.

"But we represent his majesty!" cried the count, still holding me by the throat. I was all but strangled myself.

"I care not whom you represent," said Gretchen. "I am obedient only to the king, not his minions. Release the gentlemen!"

The count's arm slowly unwound. Hillars pressed down the saber points with his hands and shook off the hand of one of the cavalrymen.

"If it be your highness' will," he said, "we will throw these intruders into the road. Might is right," waving his hand to the door which led to the barroom. The innkeeper and three others filed into the room grimly and silently. They were armed. For the first time the prince lost patience.

"This is all very well, your highness," he sneered. "You misunderstand the limits of your power to command."

"Not in any part," said Gretchen. "I am sovereign here notwithstanding the king's will is paramount to my own. These people are my people; these soldiers are fed of my bounty; this is my country till the king takes it back. You will act further at your peril."

CHAPTER XIV.

A bar of sunlight suddenly pervaded the room—red sunlight—lighting in its passing a tableau I shall never forget. Gretchen stood at her full height, her arms held closely to her sides and her hands clinched. On her face there was that half smile called consciousness of triumph. Hillars was gazing at her with his soul swimming in his eyes. And I—I had a wild desire to throw myself at her feet then and there. Over the hard set visage of the innkeeper the bar of sunlight traveled, over the scowling countenance of the prince, over the puzzled brow of the count, and, going, left a golden purple in its wake, which imperceptibly deepened. The prince was first to speak.

"I protest," said he.

"Against what?" asked Gretchen.

"It is the king's will that you become my wife. He will not tolerate this attitude of yours. Your principality is in jeopardy, let me tell you."

"Does the fact that I have promised the king to become your wife detract from my power? Not a jot. Till you are my husband I am mistress here and after."

"As to that we shall see," said the prince. "Then you intend to keep your promise?"

"Is there man or woman who can say that I ever broke one?"

"Your highness, what are your commands?" It was the innkeeper who spoke. His fingers were twitching about the hammer of his carbine. He nodded approvingly toward me. My assault upon the prince had brought me again into his good graces.

Gretchen did not answer him, but she smiled kindly.

"Ah, yes," said the prince. "This is that Brennner fellow."

The innkeeper made a movement. The prince saw it, and so did I. Prince Ernst of Wortumburg was never so near death in all his life as at that moment. He knew it too.

"Your highness has a very good memory," said the innkeeper dryly.

"There are some things it were best to forget," replied the prince.

"I am pleased that your highness shares my opinion," returned the old fellow. The muzzle of the carbine was once more pointed at the ceiling.

The rest of us looked on, but we understood nothing of these passes. Even Gretchen was in the dark.

"We met long ago," said the innkeeper.

"Yes, but I have really forgotten what the subject of our discussion was," said the prince, regarding the innkeeper through half closed lids. "Perhaps he can explain."

"It is very kind of your highness," said the innkeeper, laughing maliciously. "But I am old, and my memory serves me ill."

The prince shrugged. "But we have drifted away from the present matter. Your highness, then, promises to bend to the will of the king?"

"Yes," said Gretchen. "I gave the king my promise because I had wearied of resistance, having no one to turn to—then. I shall marry you, though I detest you. But I shall be your wife only in name and not in the eyes of God."

"The latter sacrifice was not asked of you," smiled the prince.

"I shall depart this day for the capital," continued Gretchen. "I warn you not to inflict your presence upon me during the journey. Now go. The air while you remain is somewhat difficult to breathe."

The prince surveyed the menacing faces which surrounded him, then gathered up his hat and gloves.

"I see that your highness will be a dutiful wife," he said, smoothing the silk of his hat with his elbow. He blew into his gloves and carefully drew them over his hands. "A pleasant journey to your highness," he added. "Come, count. And these," waving his hand toward Hillars and me.

"They have my fullest protection."

He smiled villainously, then walked to the door with a measured tread. At the door he turned. There was a flash of rage in his eyes, but he quickly subdued it.

"Auf wiedersehen!" with a sweeping glance which took in all of us and particularly me.

He passed out, the count following him soberly. The two cavalrymen thrust their sabers into the scabbards with a clank and made as though to follow.

"Wait," said Gretchen. "I shall have need of you. You will escort me to the station. Now you may go."

They saluted gravely. They appreciated the situation. The princess was their bread and butter.

"Your highness," said Hillars, "there has been a mistake."

"A mistake!" repeated Gretchen wonderingly.

"Yes; they have made you a princess, whereas they should have made you a queen. Will you forgive me the trouble I have caused?"

"It is I who must ask forgiveness of you," she said, with a sad smile. "You may kiss my hand, sir."

Hillars remained somewhat long over it.

"And how comes it that you gentlemen know each other?" she asked.

"Damon and Pythias, your highness," answered Hillars. "We were brought up together, and we have shared our tents and kettles. I recommend Pythias to you as a brave gentleman." Then he came to me. "You are a brave fellow, Jack," grasping my hand. "Good luck to you. I had an idea. It has returned. Now, then, innkeeper, come with me."

"With you, and where?" asked the innkeeper. If there was one thing for which he could not account, it was the presence of Hillars at the inn.

"Never mind where, but come," answered Hillars gayly. He bent and whispered something into the old fellow's ear. It was something which pleased him, for he screwed his lips into a smile and took the white hand of the whisperer in his brawny fist and nigh crushed it.

"Well, well! It doesn't matter where you came from. Here, you," to the trio behind him, "go back to the stables." They filed out. Then the innkeeper took Hillars by the arm. "Come along; time passes."

"And where are you going?" I asked anxiously. Hillars should not have passed from my sight but for Gretchen.

"We'll be back shortly," he answered. "You will know all about it then, my son."

He stood on the sill of the door, a handsome picture. His gray eyes sparkled, his face was full of excitement and there was a color in his cheeks. There was no sign here of the dissipated man of the night before. It was Hillars as I had seen him in the old days. But for his nineteenth century garb he might have just stepped down from a frame—a gallant by Fortuny, who loved the awakened animal in man. The pose was careless, but graceful, and the smile was debonair. His eyes were holding Gretchen's. A moment passed, another and another; then, "Long live and God bless her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde!" And he was gone.

And as he disappeared a shadow of some sort passed before my eyes, and a something dull and heavy pressed upon my heart. Presently came the sound of beating hoofs, and then all became still.

Gretchen and I were alone. Gretchen appeared to be studying the blue veins in her hands which she listlessly held before her. An interval of three or four minutes passed; still she remained in that pathetic attitude, silent and motionless.

"Gretchen," said I, "have you nothing to say?"

"Yes." Her eyes raised to the level of mine, and I saw that they were deep in tears. "Herr, I shall say to you that which I have never said to any man and that which I shall never say to any man again. I may say it now because it is sinless. I love you! I love you, and, loving you, God knows what the future without you shall be. Yes, I love you. Take me once in your arms and kiss me and let me go—forever."

Then, with a smile which partly shielded a sob, her arms went around my neck and her face lay close to mine. Heaven knows which was the greater, the joy or the pain.

"Gretchen, think!" I cried distractedly. "What is a prince or a king to you and me, who love?"

"There is honor," gently. She caressed my cheek with her fingers.

"Honor!" I cried vehemently. "Is it honorable to marry the man you do not love and break the heart of the one you do?"

She did not answer, but her arms fell from my neck, and she approached the window. The passing river was reflected in her eyes. Her reverie was a short one.

"Listen, herr. I will tell you why it is honorable. The prince and the king? I fear the one as little as I do the other. It is not the prince, it is not the king, it is not the principality. Herr, I have come near to being a very wicked woman, who was about to break the most sacred promise a sovereign can make. Before I came here a delegation of my people approached me. On bended knees they asked me not to voluntarily return the principality to the king, who was likely to give them a ruler rapacious or cruel or indifferent. And, while they understood what a sacrifice it meant to me, they asked me to bend my will to the king's and wed the prince, vowing that I alone should be recognized as their sovereign ruler. Since my coronation they said that they had known the first happiness in years. Herr, it was so pathetic! I love my people, who, after all, are not adopted, since I was born here. So I gave my promise, and, heaven forgive me, I was about to break it!

"There are some things, herr, which the publican does not understand. One of these is the duty a sovereign owes to the people. The woman in me wishes to follow your fortunes, though they carry her to the ends of the world, but the sovereign sees but one path—honor and duty. What is one human heart to a hundred thousand? A grain of sand. Herr, let mine be broken. I shall not murmur. Alas, to be a princess, a puppet in this tinsel show of kings and queens! It is my word and the king's will which have made my happiness an impossibility. Though I love you, I wish never to see you again. I shall be wife but in name, yet I may not have a lover. I am not a woman of the court. I am proud of my honor, though the man who is to be my husband doubts that."

"No, Gretchen," said I, "he does not doubt it, but he wishes me to do so. I believe in your innocence as I believe in your love."

"It is sad, is it not," said she, "that we must go through our days loving each other and all the world standing between? I have never loved a man before. I did not want to love you. I did not know that I loved you till I saw that your life was in danger. Yet I am glad that I have lived for a brief second, for till a woman loves she does not live. I am brave; do you be likewise. I shall go back to the world, and who shall know of the heart of fire beneath the ice? Not even the man I love. Kiss me. It is the last kiss I shall take from the lips of any man."

And it seemed to me that our souls met in that last kiss, melted and became one. Her hands dropped to her side, and swiftly she sped from the room.

She had entered the coach. The cavalrymen were perched upon the box. There was a crack of the lash, and the coach rolled away. I watched it, standing in the road. A cloud of yellow dust partially obscured it from view. Half a mile beyond rose a small hill. This the coach mounted, and the red gold of the smoldering sun engulfed it. Was it a face I saw at the window? Perhaps. Then over the hill all disappeared and with it the whole world, and I stood in emptiness, alone.

Gretchen had gone.

CHAPTER XV.

I was wandering aimlessly through the rose gardens when the faroff sound of galloping hoofs came on the breeze. Nearer and nearer it drew. I ran out into the highway. I saw a horse come wildly dashing along. It was riderless, and as it came closer I saw the foam of sweat dripping from its flanks and shoulders. As the animal plunged toward me I made a spring and caught the bridle, hanging on till the brute came to a standstill. It was quivering from fright. There was a gash on its neck, and it was bleeding and turning the white flakes of sweat into a murky crimson.

"Good Lord!" I ejaculated. "It's one of the cavalry horses. Hillars or the innkeeper has been hurt."

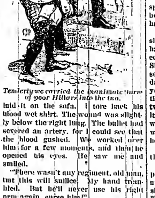
I was of the mind to mount the animal and go in search of them when Stahlberg, who had come to my assistance, said that I had best wait. A quarter of an hour passed. Then we could see another horse, perhaps half a mile away, coming toward the inn at a canter. From what I could see in the pale light, the horse carried a double burden. A sheet of ice seemed to fall on my heart. What had happened? Had Dan and the prince come to blows? Alas, I could have cried out in anguish at the sight which finally met my gaze. The innkeeper held the reins, and propped up in front of him was Hillars, to all appearances dead.

"Gott," cried the innkeeper, discovering me, "but I am glad to see you, herr! Your friend has been hurt, badly, badly."

"Heavens!" I cried. The hand and wrist of the innkeeper which encircled Hillars were drenched in blood.

"Yes; a bullet somewhere in his chest. Help me down with him. He is not dead yet. I'll tell you the story when we have made it comfortable for him."

Tenderly we carried the inanimate form of poor Hillars into the inn and laid it on the sofa. I tore back his blood wet shirt. The wound was slightly below the right lung. The bullet had severed an artery, for I could see that the blood gushed. We worked over him for a few moments, and then he opened his eyes. He saw me and smiled.



Tenderly we carried the inanimate form of poor Hillars into the inn.

"There wasn't any regiment, old man, but this will suffice. My hand trembled. But he'll never use his right arm again, curse him!"

"Dan, Dan," I cried, "what made you do it?"

"When I am a man's friend, it is in life and death. He was in the way. He may thank liquor that he lives." The lids of his eyes contracted. "It hurts a little, but it will not be for long, my son. I am bleeding to death inside. Jack, the woman loves you, and in God's eyes, princess or not, she belongs to you. You and I cannot understand these things which make it impossible for a man and a woman who love each other to wed. Let me hold your hand. I feel like an old woman. Give me a mouthful of brandy. Ah, that's better! Innkeeper, your courage is not to be doubted, but your judgment of liquor is. Anyway, Jack, I suppose you will not forget me in a week or so, eh?"

"Dan!" was all I could say, bending over his hand to hide my tears.

"Jack, you are not sorry?"

"Dan, you are more to me than any woman in the world."

"Oh, say! You wouldn't—hold me up a bit higher; that's it—you wouldn't have me hang on now, would you? I haven't anything to live for, no matter how you put it. Home? I never had one. The only regret I have in leaving is that the prince will not keep me company. Put an obol in my hand, and Charon will see me over the Styx.

> "And when, like her, O Saki, you shall pass
> Among the guests star scattered on the grass,
> And in your joyous errand reach the spot
> Where I made one, turn down an empty glass!

"Well, hang me, Jack, if you aren't crying! Then you thought more of me than I believed; a man's tears mean more than a woman's. A man must die, and what is a year or two? How much better to fold the tent when living becomes tasteless and the cup is full of lees! The prince was a trifle cruel, but perhaps his hand trembled too. Innkeeper, you're a good fellow."

"Herr is a man of heart," said the grizzled veteran sadly.

"Tell Jack how it happened," said Dan. "It hurts me."

On leaving me, Hillars and the innkeeper, after having taken a pair of pistols, had mounted the cavalry horses despite the protests of the owners, and had galloped away in pursuit of the prince and Count von Walden. They caught sight of them a mile or so ahead. They were loping along at a fair speed. It took half an hour to bring the two parties within speaking distance. Although the prince and Von Walden heard them, they never turned around, but kept on straight ahead. This made Hillars' choler rise, and he spurred forward.

"One moment, gentlemen," he cried. "I have a word with you!"

They galloped on unheeding. When Hillars got in front of them, they merely veered to either side.

"Ah!" said Hillars, choking with rage. With a quick movement he bent and caught the bridle of the prince's horse. The count, seeing that the prince was compelled to rein in, did likewise. The prince looked disdainful.

"Well, what is it?" asked Von Walden. "Speak quickly. Has your scribbling friend run away with her highness?"

"My remarks, most noble and puissant count," said Hillars, bowing satirically to the neck of his horse, "I shall confine to the still more noble and puissant Prince of Wortumborg."

"This is an unappreciated honor," sneered the prince.

"So it is," replied Hillars lightly. "When an honest man speaks to you, he is conferring an honor upon you which you, as you say, cannot appreciate. It appears to me that your highness has what we in America call malaria. I propose to put a hole through you and let out this bad substance. Lead, properly used, is a great curative. Sir, your presence on this beautiful world is an eyesore to me."

"One excuse is as good as another," said the prince. "Did her highness delegate you to put me out of the way?"

"Oh, no. But since you have brought her name into it, I confess that it is on her account. Well, sir, no man has ever insulted a woman in my presence and gone unpunished. In English speaking lands we knock him down. This being Rome, I shall do as the Romans do. I believe I called you a liar. I will do so again. Is the object of my errand plain?"

"As I said to your friend," smiled the prince, "I will send a lackey down here to take care of you. Count, we shall hardly get to the station in time to catch the train. Young man, stand aside. You annoy me. I have no time to discuss the princess or her lovers. Release my horse!"

"What a cur you are!" cried Hillars, losing his airy tone. "By heaven, you will fight me if I have to knock you down and spit upon you!" Then with full force he flung his hat into the face of the prince.

"You have written finis to your tale," said the prince, dismounting.

"Your highness," exclaimed the count, springing to the ground, "this must not be! You shall not risk your life at the hands of this cursed adventurer."

"Patience, count," said the prince, shaking off the hand which the count had placed upon his shoulder. "Decidedly this fellow is worth consideration. Since we have no swords, sir, and they seem to be woman's weapons these days, we will use pistols. Of course, you have come prepared. It is a fine time for shooting. This first light of twilight gives us equal advantage. Will it be at 10 or 20 paces? I dare say, if we stand at 20 in the center of the road, we shall have a good look at each other before we separate indefinitely."

"Your highness insists?" murmured the count.

"I not only insist; I command." The prince took off his coat and waistcoat and deposited them on the grass at the side of the road. Hillars did likewise. There was a pleased expression on his face. "I do believe, count," laughed the prince, "this fellow expects to kill me. Now the pistols."

"If you will permit me," said the innkeeper, taking an oblong box from under his coat. "These are excellent weapons."

The prince laughed. "I suppose, innkeeper, if the result is disastrous to me it will please you?"

The innkeeper was not lacking in courtesy. "It would be a pleasure, I assure you. There are certain reasons why I cannot fight you myself."

"To be sure."

"It would be too much like murder," continued the innkeeper. "Your hand would tremble so that you would miss me at point blank. There goes the last of the sun. We must hurry."

With a grimace the count accepted the box and took out the pistols.

"They are old fashioned," he said.

"A deal like the innkeeper's morals," supplemented the prince.

"But effective," said the innkeeper.

The count scowled at the old fellow, who met the look with phlegm. As an innkeeper he might be an inferior, but as a second at a duel he was an equal. It was altogether a different matter.

The count carefully loaded the weapons, the innkeeper watching him attentively. In his turn he examined them.

"Very good," he said.

The paces were then measured out. During this labor the prince gazed indifferently toward the west. The aftermath of the sun glowed on the horizon. The prince shaded his eyes for a spell.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I believe the princess is approaching. At any rate, here comes the coach. Let us suspend hostilities till she has passed."

A few minutes later the coach came rumbling along in a whirlwind of dust. The stoical cavalrymen kept on without so much as a glance at the quartet standing at the side of the road. Hillars looked after the vehicle till it was obscured from view. Then he shook himself out of the dream into which he had fallen. He was pale now, and his eyebrows were drawn together as the count held out the pistol.

"Ah, yes!" he said as though he had forgotten. "There goes the woman who will never become your wife."

"That shall be decided at once," was the retort of the prince.

"She will marry the gentleman back at the inn."

"A fine husband he will make, truly!" replied the prince. "He not only deserts her, but forsakes her champion. But that is neither here nor there. We shall not go through any polite formalities," his eyes snapping viciously.

The two combatants took their places in the center of the road. The pistol arm of each hung at the side of the body.

"Are you ready, gentlemen?" asked the count, the barest tremor in his voice.

"Yes," said the prince. Hillars simply nodded.

"When I have counted three, you will be at liberty to fire. One!"

The arms raised slowly till the pistols were on the level of the eyes.

"Two!"

The innkeeper saw Hillars move his lips. That was the only sign.

"Three!"

The pistols exploded simultaneously. The right arm of the prince swung back violently, the smoking pistol flying from his hand. Suddenly one of the horses gave a snort of pain and terror and bolted down the road. No attention was given to the horse. The others were watching Hillars. He stood perfectly motionless. All at once the pistol fell from his hand. Then both hands flew instinctively to his breast. There was an expression of surprise on his face. His eyes closed, his knees bent forward and he sank into the road a huddled heap. The prince shrugged, a sigh of relief fell from the count's half parted lips, while the innkeeper ran toward the fallen man.

"Are you hurt, prince?" asked the count.

"The cursed fool has blown off my elbow!" was the answer. "Bind it up with your handkerchief and help me on with my coat. There is nothing more to do. If he is not dead, he soon will be, so it's all the same."

When the prince's arm was sufficiently bandaged so as to stop the flow of blood, the count assisted him to mount, jumped on his own horse and the two cantered off, leaving the innkeeper, Hillars' head propped up on his knee, staring after them with a dull rage in his faded blue eyes. The remaining horse was grazing a short distance away. Now and then he lifted his head and gazed inquiringly at the two figures in the road.

"Is it bad, herr?" the innkeeper asked.

"Very. Get back to the inn. I don't want to peter out here." Then he fainted.

It required some time and all the innkeeper's strength to put Hillars on the horse. When this was accomplished, he turned the horse's head toward the inn. And that was all.

"Dan?" said I.

The lids of his eyes rolled wearily back.

"Is there anything I can do for you?"

"Bury me."

It was very sad. "Where?" I asked.

"Did you see the little cemetery on the hill, across the valley? Put me there. It is a wild, forgotten place. 'Tis only my body. Who cares what becomes of that? As for the other, the soul, who can say? I have never been a good man. Still I believe in God. I am tired, tired and cold. What fancies a man has in death! A moment back I saw my father. There was a wan, sweet faced woman standing close beside him; perhaps my mother. I never saw her before. Ah, me! those chimeras we set our hearts upon, these worldly hopes! Well, Jack, it's curtain and no encore. But I am not afraid to die. I have wronged no man or woman. I have been my own enemy. What shall I say, Jack? Ah, yes! God have mercy on my soul! And this sudden coldness, this sudden ease from pain, is death!"

There was a flutter of the eyelids, a sigh, and this poor flotsam, this driftwood which had never known a harbor in all his years, this friend of mine, this inseparable comrade, passed out.

There were hot tears in my eyes as I stood up and gazed down at this mystery called death, and while I did so a hand, horny and hard, closed over mine. The innkeeper, with blinking eyes, stood at my side.

"Ah, herr," he said, "who would not die like that?"

And we buried him on the hillside just as the sun swept aside the rosy curtain of dawn. The wind, laden with fresh morning perfumes, blew up joyously from the river. From where I stood I could see the drab walls of the barracks. The windows sparkled and flashed as the gray mists sailed heavenward and vanished. The hill with its long grasses resembled a green sea. The thick forests across the river, almost black at the water's edge, turned a fainter and more delicate hue as they receded till far away they looked like mottled glass. Only yesterday he had laughed with me, talked and smoked with me, and now he was dead. A rage pervaded me. We are puny things, we who strut the highways of the world, parading a so called wisdom. There is only one philosophy; it is to learn to die.

"Come," said I to the innkeeper, and we went down the hill.

"When does the herr leave?"

"At once. There will be no questions?" I asked, pointing to the village.

"None. Who knows?"

"Then remember that Herr Hillars was taken suddenly ill and died and that he desired to be buried here. I dare say the prince will find some excuse for his arm, knowing the king's will in regard to dueling. Do you understand me?"

"Yes."

I did not speak to him again, and he strode along at my heels with an air of preoccupation. We reached the inn in silence.

"What do you know about her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde?" I asked abruptly.

"What does herr wish to know?" shifting his eyes from my gaze.

"All you can tell me."

"I was formerly in her father's service. My wife"— He hesitated, and the expression on his face was a sour one.

"Go on."

"Ah, but it is unpleasant, herr. You see, my wife and I were not on the best of terms. She was handsome—a cousin of the late prince. She left me more than 20 years ago. I have never seen her since, and I trust that she is dead. She was her late highness' hairdresser."

"And the Princess Hildegarde?"

Death of Mrs. Hillgrove.

Died, at Bemidji, Minnesota, on the 16th inst., Sarah Hillgrove, in the 72nd year of her life. Deceased was born in Nova Scotia, and was among the early settlers in Minnesota, having settled at Hazelton, Rice Co., in 1856. She was one of the first settlers at Red Lake Falls locating here in 1880, and resided here until a few months ago when she moved with her family to Bemidji. She leaves one son Wm. J. who is well known to the people of this city, and three daughters all grown.

The remains were shipped to Hazlewood, for interment beside those of her husband, who died some thirty years ago. The news of Mrs. Hillgrove's death comes as a painful surprise to her old friends and neighbors here, whose regret is that they were deprived of the opportunity of administering to her in her last illness which came upon her away from the old home and friends, as Mrs. Hillgrove had established a reputation for kindness and thoughtfulness in times of sickness. The Gazette extends sympathy to the grief stricken family.

VIC'S LETTER

OUR CORRESPONDENT SENDS AN INTERESTING BUDGET OF NEWS.

HAS BEEN ILL AND CONFINED IN A GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL.

Calamba P. I. Dec. 12th, 1900.
Ed. Gazette:—

As I have been out of the hospital for a few days and find time to write I will drop a few lines to let you know how I am getting along.

I came out of the hospital feeling much better, but not like my old self. I was weak and so could not do straight duty, so our Lieut. gave me the position of quarter-master sargeant and cook. The boys each chipped in one and a half a dollar to get extra rations, and I tell you we are living well. We were to have a special Christmas dinner, but as we will be on a sort of a campaign about that time nothing unusual will be gotten up.

I have hired a boy of about 14 years of age (native) to help me with my work and pay him two pesos a month, or one dollar American money.

We will leave this place next Monday to run a road from here to Batangus, and then to Lake Toal a total distance of about 100 miles of road We will have with us about 150 native workmen, eight teams, seven men and one officer. We will also have a company of soldiers as guards. All I have to do is to cook and draw rations and buy extras for seven engineers, eight teamsters and one officer.

This reminds one of the stories of early days of the west, when parties went out with a "prairie schooner." It is great sport if one can keep his health. We all like it far better than life in Manila.

The Gov. pays these native workmen 50 cents Mexican money or 25 American money per day. Isn't that great wages? But still they are anxious to get work.

Well I will soon be coming back. I have one year and four months time to put in yet before I am a free man again. I shall then be glad to return if I get the discharge that I expect.

The native workmen have killed a big snake that measured 12 feet 11 inches. I had the skin saved and dried, and if I have success with it I shall give it to you to decorate the windows of The Gazette office.

This is all for this time. I remain as ever.

NEWTON-CANFIELD

FLORENCE LOUISE NEWTON AND GEO. H. CANFIELD MARRIED.

A SOCIETY EVENT OF INTEREST BOTH HERE AND AT CLEVELAND.

The Cleveland, O., Leader, has the following interesting account of the Newton-Canfield wedding, which was solemnized on the 17th inst.:

In the parlor of their home, No. 1952 Euclid avenue, at 7 o'clock last night, Miss Florence Louise Newton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Newton, of Red Lake Falls Minn., and Mr. Geo. H. Canfield were married. The ceremony was performed by Rev. B. T. Noakes, of the Church of the Epiphany.

The bride was beautiful in her gown of pearl gray crepe de chine, with trimmings of point lace. She carried a bouquet of bride roses. Her only attendant was her sister, who wore a pretty gown of pink liberty satin, with trimmings of white lace, and carried a bouquet of bridesmaid roses. The bride was given in marriage by her father. During the ceremony a wedding march was played on a harp.

A large reception, attended by 800 guests, followed at the residence of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Canfield, No. 1954 Euclid avenue. There the decorations were very beautiful. The bridal party received before a wall of tall palms, and the rooms were hung with Southern smilax and beautified with masses of roses. A harp orchestra played during the reception hours.

Mrs. Newton, the bride's mother, wore a handsome gown of black and white brocaded silk. Mrs. Canfield's gown was of pink and green changeable silk poplin with flounces of black thread lace. Miss Edna May Canfield wore a dainty dress of blue crepe de chine and carried a long stemmed American beauty rose.

Refreshments were served in the new home of the young couple, which was connected with the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Canfield by a canopy. A round table, beautifully decorated, was prepared for the bride and groom and ten of the bridal party. The presents received by the young couple were unusually handsome and valuable, comprising everything needed in the way of house furnishing, and numerous ornamental art objects. The Adams Express Company's employes sent a trunk elaborately decorated with ribbons, containing several pairs of old shoes and a stock of hats and clothing, with the placards "There will be no frost here" and "No more cold feet."

Mr. and Mrs. Canfield departed on an Eastern trip late last evening. On their return they will be at home at No. 1952 Euclid avenue.

SUPPLIES FOR INDIANS.

Move Made to Confine Bids to Western Dealers.

Washington, Jan. 21.—The jobbers in St. Paul and Minneapolis and in other large cities of the West and Northwest, are making an effort to induce the Indian officials to purchase supplies for the service in the West, instead of spending the bulk of the appropriation in New York. Senator Nelson, accompanied by Attorney Spooner, was at the Indian office in the interest of the Twin City jobbers. The Indian office spends about $350,000 a year in foodstuffs, wearing apparel and other supplies. Up to two years ago Eastern jobbers had a monopoly in the sale of supplies to the Indian office. Indian Commissioner Jones made a change at that time, opening bids in Chicago for the purpose of obtaining a part of the annual supplies for the service.

Objection was made to this change by the New York jobbers, but it was carried out and Commissioner Jones expressed himself as favoring the purchase of the bulk of the supplies in the West. The Northwestern merchants claim they are better situated for supplying goods to the Indian service than those in the East and are more entitled to the trade than their Eastern brethren. Commissioner Jones, it is believed, will recommend that bids be opened exclusively in the West.

MINNESOTA IS THIRD.

Figures Showing the Standing Timber Area of Lumber States.

Washington, Jan. 18.—A valuable report on the lumber trade is now being prepared for public information by the bureau of statistics, which estimates that the standing timber in the United States now cover an area of 1,094,496 square miles, and contains a supply of 2,300,000,000,000 feet. The states having the largest supply of timber are as follows:

Texas, 64,000 square miles; Oregon, 54,300; Minnesota, 53,200; Washington, 47,700; Arkansas, 47,000; California, 44,700; Montana, 42,000; Georgia, 42,000; Missouri 41,000.

We are cutting our timber at the rate of about 40,000,000,000 feet a year, and if the same average is continued our supply will last about 60 years.

DISEASE DYING OUT.

Smallpox in Lumber Camps Fast Disappearing.

Duluth, Jan. 21.—There is no smallpox in the lumber camps on the ranges where it was said to be common a few weeks ago. It is not probable that any effort will now be made to carry the case of the anti-vaccinationists to the supreme court, as no success has attended the attempt to raise money for that purpose. Unless considerable sums come in quite soon the money collected will be returned. Most of the school children that remained out of school for the earlier months of the season on account of a prejudice against vaccination have now returned, and it is not supposed that more than 500 are now denied school privileges by the ruling of the city physician and the action of the school board.

MINNESOTA RATES.

Subject Discussed Before the Industrial Commission.

Washington, Jan. 22.—A. K. Teisberg of St. Paul, secretary of the Minnesota railroad commission, discussed before the industrial commission the transportation of grain in Minnesota. He stated that during the past few years there had been many reductions in the state freight rates and in some cases the charges had been reduced 50 per cent. He testified that there now is hardly a railroad station in Minnesota where there is not a farmers' cooperative elevator. As far as he knew, the farmers' elevators were accorded the same privileges and courtesies as the elevator companies. He thought that the interstate commerce commission should be empowered, upon complaint, to adjust discriminations in railroad rates.

DEVELOP COPPER RANGE.

Calumet and Hecla Company Buy Wisconsin Lands.

Duluth, Jan. 19.—It is announced in mining circles in Duluth that the board of directors of the Calumet and Hecla Copper Mining company have obtained a controlling interest in 100,000 acres of land on the Douglass county copper range in Wisconsin near Superior and will expend at least $2,000,000 in exploratory and development work. The land was owned by Frederick Weyerhauser and his associates and was originally bought by them for the timber. It has long been known that copper and gold are to be found on the copper range, but the development work heretofore has been retarded on account of a lack of funds. A new company is being formed, of which the Calumet and Hecla people will be the controlling spirits.

ON VESSEL TAXATION.

Proposed Commission to Confer With Minnesota Legislature.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 21.—In the assembly Mr. Lenroot introduced a bill creating a commission of three to confer with the Minnesota legislature to arrange uniformity of legislation upon the subject of vessel taxation. In the senate Mr. Roehr introduced a bill of considerable interest, providing for a state board of osteopathy. This is an entirely new departure and it is intended to put osteopathists on the same basis as other regular practicing physicians.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

BRITISH-BOER WAR NEWS.

A small Boer commando entered Sutherland, cut the telegraph wires, looted the stores and then proceeded northward.

According to the Cape Town correspondent of The Daily Mail, the Boers occupied Aberdeen, 40 miles south of Graff Reinet, on Jan. 15.

The New Zealanders and the Australian bushmen vigorously attacked 800 Boers eight miles west of Elandsberg. The Boers had four killed and two wounded.

The British government has decided to send large reinforcements to Lord Kitchener, and the war office in carrying out this decision has determined to enlist 5,000 yeomanry volunteers.

Colville's mobile column, marching from New Denmark to Vlaklaagte, was attacked by 1,000 Boers, divided into two forces. Eventually both attacks were repulsed, the Boers losing heavily.

The important report has been received from Johannesburg that General Dewet has crossed the Vaal and joined the Vaal forces. If true, this probably means the concentration of 7,000 Boers, with several guns, for another big attack.

As an outcome of the report from several sources that the Boers have worn khaki, a government edict has been issued in Cape Town prohibiting Boers from wearing khaki, and notifying all persons who wear this costume that they will render themselves liable to arrest and imprisonment.

An extraordinary gazette just issued at Cape Town contains a proclamation placing the whole of Cape Colony under martial law with the exception of the Cape Town, Wynberg, Simonstown, Port Elizabeth and East London districts and the territories of Transkei, Griqualand and East Pondoland.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900,
By Harold MacGrath.

"She is a woman for whom I would gladly lay down my life."

"Yes, yes!" I said impatiently. "Who made her the woman she is? Who taught her to shoot and fence?"

"It was I."

"You?"

"Yes. From childhood she has been [illegible] care. Her mother did so desire. She is all I have in the world to love. And she loves me, herr, for in all her trials I have been her only friend. But why do you ask these questions?" a sudden suspicion lighting his eyes.

"I love her."

He took me by the shoulders and squared me in front of him. "How do you love her?" a glint of anger mingling with the suspicion.

"I love her as a man who wishes to make her his wife."

His hands trailed down my sleeves till they met and joined mine.

"I will tell you all there is to be told. Herr, there was once a happy family in the palace of the Hohenphallans. The prince was rather wild, but he loved his wife. One day his cousin came to visit him. He was a fascinating man in those days, and few women were there who would not give an ear to his flatteries. He was often with the princess, but she hated him. One day an abominable thing happened. This cousin loved the princess. She scorned him. As the prince was entering the boudoir this cousin, making out that he was unconscious of the husband's approach, took the princess in his arms and kissed her. The prince was too far away to see the horror in his wife's face. He believed her to be acquiescent. That night he accused her. Her denials were in vain. He confronted her with his cousin, who swore before the immortal God himself that the princess had lain willing in his arms. From that time on the prince changed. He became reckless; he fell in with evil company; he grew to be a shameless ruffian, a man who brought his women into his wife's presence and struck her while they were there. And in his passions he called her terrible names. He made a vow that when children came he would make them things of scorn. In her great trouble the princess came to my inn, where the Princess Hildegarde was born. The prince refused to believe that the child was his. My mistress finally sickened and died broken hearted. The prince died in a gambling den. The King became the guardian of the lonely child. He knows but little or he would not ask her highness"— He stopped.

He took the princess in his arms and kissed her.

"He would not ask her what?"

"To wed the man who caused all this trouble."

"What! Prince Ernst?"

"Yes; I prayed to God, herr, that your friend's bullet would carry death, but it was not to be."

"I am going back to London," said I. "When I have settled up my affairs there I shall return."

"And then?"

"Perhaps I shall complete what my friend began."

I climbed into the ramshackle conveyance and was driven away. Once I looked back. The innkeeper could be seen on the porch; then he became lost to view behind the trees. Far away to my left the stones in the little cemetery on the hillside shone with brilliant whiteness.

CHAPTER XVI.

There were intervals during the three months which followed when I believed that I was walking in a dream and waking would find me grubbing at my desk in New York. It was so unreal for these days—mosaic romance in the heart of prosaic fact! Was there ever the like? It was real enough, however, in the daytime, when the roar of London hammered at my tears, but when I sat alone in my room it assumed the hazy garments of a dream. Sometimes I caught myself listening for Hillars, a footstep in the corridor, and I would take my pipe from my mouth and wait expectantly. But the door never opened, and the footsteps always passed on. Often in my dreams I stood by the river again. There is solace in these deep, wide streams. We come and go—our hopes, our loves, our ambitions. Nature alone remains. Should I ever behold Gretchen again? Perhaps. Yet there was no thrill at the thought. If ever I beheld her again, it would be when she was placed beyond the glance of my eye, the touch of my hand. She was mine, aye, as a dream might be; something I possessed, but could not hold. Heigho! The faces that peer at us from the firelight shadows! They troop along in a ghostly cavalcade, and the winds that creep over the window sill and under the door—who can say that they are not the echoes of voices we once heard in the past?

I was often on the verge of sending in my resignation, but I would remember in time that work meant bread and butter—and forgetfulness. When I returned to the office, few questions were asked, though my [illegible] looked many of them reproachfully. I told him that Hillars had died abroad and that he had been buried on the continent at his request, all of which was true, but only half of it. I did my best to keep the duel a secret, but it finally came out. It was the topic in the clubs, for Hillars had been well known in political and literary circles. But in a month or so the affair subsided. The world never stops very long, even when it loses one of its best friends.

One late October morning I received a note which read:

John Winthrop:

Dear Sir—I am in London for a few days, homeward bound from a trip to Egypt, and as we are cousins and "orphans, too," I should like the pleasure of making your acquaintance. Trusting that I shall find you at leisure, I am, your humble servant,

PHILIP PEMBROKE.

"Ah," said I, "that Louisianian cousin of mine, who may or may not live the year out," recalling the old lawyer's words. "He seems to hang on pretty well. I hope he'll be interesting. Few rich men are. He writes like a polite creditor. What did the old fellow say was the matter with him? Heart trouble or consumption? I can't remember." I threw the note aside and touched up some of my dispatches.

Precisely at 10 o'clock the door opened, and a man came in. He was fashionably dressed, a mixture of Piccadilly and Broadway in taste. He was tall, slender, but well formed, and his blond mustache shone out distinctly against a background of tanned skin. He had fine blue eyes.

"Have I the pleasure of speaking to John Winthrop of New York?" he began, taking off his hat.

I rose. "I am the man." He presented his card, and on it I read, "Philip Pembroke."

"Philip Pembroke!" I exclaimed.

"Evidently you are surprised?" showing a set of strong white teeth.

"Truthfully I am," I said, taking his hand. "You see," I added apologetically, "your family lawyer—that is—he gave me the—er—impression that you were a sickly fellow—one foot in the grave or something like. I was not expecting a man of your build."

The smile broadened into a deep laugh, and a merry one, I thought enviously. It was so long since I had laughed.

"That was a hobby of the old fellow," he replied. "When I was a boy, I had palpitation of the heart. He never got rid of the idea that I might die at any moment. He was always warning me about violent exercises, the good old soul. Peace to his ashes!"

"He is dead?"

"Yes. When I took to traveling, he all but had nervous prostration. I suppose he told you about that will I made in your favor. It was done to please him. Still," he added soberly, "it stands. I travel a deal, and no one knows what may happen. And so you are the John Winthrop my dad treated so shabbily? Oh, don't protest; he did. I should have hunted you up long ago and given you a solid bank account, only I knew that the son of my aunt must necessarily be a gentleman and therefore would not look favorably upon such a proceeding."

"Thank you," said I. The fellow pleased me.

"And then I did not know but what you cared nothing for money."

"True. A journalist doesn't care anything about money. The life is too easy and pleasant, and most of the things he needs are thrown in, as they say."

This bit of sarcasm did not pass. My cousin laughed again that merry laugh of his.

"I think we shall become great friends," he said. "I like frankness."

"My remark in its literal sense was the antithesis of frankness."

"Ah, you said too much not to be frank. Frankness is one of the reasons why I do not get on well with the women. I can't lie in the right place, and when I do it is generally ten times worse than the plain truth."

"You're a man of the world, I see."

"No; merely a spectator."

"Well, you have the price of admission. With me it's a free pass. Some day we will compare notes."

"Who is your banker?"

"Banker? I have none. I distrust banks. They take your mite and invest it in what nots, and sometimes when you go for it it is not there."

"And then again it multiplies so quickly that you have more than you know what to do with, eh?"

"As to that I cannot say. It is hearsay, rumor. So far as I know it may be so. Experience has any number of teachers. The trouble is we cannot study under them all. Necessity has been my principal instructor. Sometimes she has larruped me soundly, though I was a model scholar. You will go to luncheon with me?"

"If you will promise to dine with me this evening." And I promised.

For an hour or more we chatted upon congenial topics. He was surprisingly well informed. He had seen more of the world than I, though he had not observed it so closely. As we were about to leave the door opened, and Phyllis, Ethel and her husband, Mr. Holland, entered. For a moment the room was filled with the fragrance of October air and the essence of violets. They had been in town a week. They had been "doing" the Strand, so Ethel said, and thought they would make me a brief visit to see how "it was done," the foreign correspondence. Mr. Wentworth and his wife were already domiciled at B——, and the young people were going over to enjoy the winter festivities. Phyllis was unchanged. How like Gretchen, I thought!

While Ethel was engaging my cousin's attention I conducted Phyllis through the office.

"What a place to work in!" said Phyllis, laughing. The laugh awakened a vague thrill. "Dust, dust—everywhere dust. You need a woman to look after you, Jack."

As I did not reply, she looked quickly at me, and, seeing that my face was grave, she flushed.

"Forgive me, Jack," impulsively. "I did not think."

I answered her with a reassuring smile.

"How long are you to remain in town?" I asked to disembarrass her.

"We leave day after tomorrow, Saturday—a day or two in Paris, and then we go on. Every one in New York is talking about your book. I knew that you were capable."

"I hope every one is buying it," said I, passing over her last observation.

"Was it here that you wrote it?"

"Oh, no. It was written in my rooms under the most favorable circumstances."

"I thought so. This is a very dreary place."

"Perhaps I like it for that reason."

Her eyes were two interrogation points, but I pretended not to see.

"What nice eyes your cousin has," she said, shyly glancing. "With a woman it is always a man's eyes."

"And his father was the man who left you the fortune?"

"Yes," I answered, with a short laugh. Of course I had never told Phyllis of that thousand dollar check.

"You must run over this winter and see us," she said. "I anticipate nothing but dinners, balls and diplomatic receptions. I have never been there. It will all be new to me. Think of seeing Egypt, the holy lands, Russia, France and Spain and yet not seeing the very heart of the continent! Thank goodness, I know the language."

"And will she not be a sensation?" joined in Ethel.

"A decided sensation," said I, scrutinizing the beautiful face so near me. What if they met, as probably they would—Phyllis and Gretchen? "Phyllis," said I suddenly, "where were you born?"

"Where was I born?" with a wondering little laugh. "In America. Where did you suppose?"

"Eden," said I. "I wasn't sure, so I asked."

"I do not know how to take that," she said, with mock severity.

"Oh, I meant Eden when it was paradise!" I hastened to say.

"Yes," put in Pembroke. "Please go back, Miss Landors, and begin the world all over again."

"Phyllis," said I in a whisper, "have you ever met that remarkable affinity of yours?" I regretted the words the moment they had crossed my lips.

"Yes, you are changed, as I said the other night," distrustfully. "There is something in your voice that is changed. You have grown cynical. But your question was impertinent. Have you found yours?"

I was expecting this. "Yes," I said. "Once I thought I had; now I am sure of it. Some day I shall tell you an interesting story."

"We came up to ask you to dine with us this evening," she said, trailing her brown gloved finger over the dusty desk. "Are you at liberty?"

"No; I have only just met my cousin and have promised to dine with him."

"If that is all, bring him along. I like his face."

We passed out of the tileroom.

"Phyllis, we must be going, dear," said Ethel.

I led Phyllis down the narrow stairs. A handsome victoria stood at the curb.

"I shall be pleased to hear your story," said she.

It occurred to me that the tale might not be to her liking, so I said, "But it is one of those disagreeable stories—one where all should end nicely, but doesn't; one which ends leaving the hero, the heroine and the reader dissatisfied with the world in general and the author, who is fate, in particular."

I knew that she was puzzled. She wasn't quite sure that I was not referring to the old affair.

"If the story is one I never heard before," suspiciously, "I should like to hear it."

"And does it not occur to you," throwing back the robes so that she might step into the victoria, "that fate has a special grudge against me? Once was not enough, but it must be twice."

"And she does not love you? Are you quite sure? You poor fellow!" She squeezed my hand kindly. "Shall I be candid with you?" with the faintest flicker of coquetry in her smile.

"As in the old days," said I, glancing over my shoulder to see how near the others were. A groom is never to be considered. "Yes, as in the old days."

"Well, I have often regretted that I did not accept you as an experiment."

Then I knew that she did not understand.

"You must not think I am jesting," said I seriously. "The story is of the bittersweet kind. The heroine loves me, cannot be mine."

"Loves you?" with a slight start. "How do you know?"

"She has told me so," lowering my voice.

Frankness of this sort to a woman who has rejected you has a peculiar effect. The coquetry faded from her smile, and there was a perceptible contraction of the brows. Her eyes, which were looking into mine, shifted to the back of the groom. No, I shall never understand a woman. She should have been the most sympathetic woman in the world, yet she appeared to be annoyed.

"What's all this between you and Phyllis?" asked Ethel, coming up.

"There is nothing between her and me," said I.

"Well, there should be," she retorted. "That is the trouble."

My observation was: "I have always held that immediately a woman gets married she makes it her business to see that all old bachelors are lugged out and disposed of to old maids."

"I shall never forgive that," Phyllis declared; "never."

"Then I shall always have the exquisite pleasure of being a suppliant for your pardon. It is delightful to sue pardon of a beautiful woman."

Phyllis sniffed.

"Forgive him at once," said Ethel, "if only for that pretty speech."

Mr. Holland pulled out his watch suggestively.

"Well," I said, "I see that I am keeping you from your lunch. Goodby, then, till dinner, when I shall continue at length on the evils"—

"William," interrupted Ethel, addressing the groom, "drive on."

And so they left us.

"Shall we go to lunch now?" I asked of Pembroke.

"Yes," rather dreamily, I thought.

"Do you know," with sudden animation, "she is a remarkably beautiful woman?"

"Yes, she is." After all, the sight of Phyllis had rather upset me.

"I had a glimpse of her in Vienna last winter," went on Pembroke. "I never knew who she was."

"Vienna!" I exclaimed.

"Yes. It was at a concert. Her face was indelibly graven on my memory. I asked a neighbor who she was, but when I went to point her out she was gone. I should like to see more of her."

So Gretchen had been in Vienna, and poor Hillars had never known.

I took Pembroke to the club that afternoon, and we dallied in the billiard room till time to dress for dinner. Dinner came. But Phyllis forgot to ask me about the story, at which I grew puzzled, considering what I know of woman's curiosity. And she devoted most of her time to Pembroke, who did not mind. Later we went to the theater—same production of Gilbert and Sullivan. Whenever I glanced at Phyllis I fell to wondering how Gretchen would have looked in evening dress. Yes, Phyllis was certainly beautiful; uncommonly. For years I had worshiped at her shrine, and then—how little we know of the heart! I was rather abstracted during the performance, and many of my replies went wide the mark.

As we were leaving the foyer Phyllis said, "Jack, a man has been staring me out of countenance!"

"Pembroke?" I laughed.

"No. And, moreover, the stare was accompanied by the most irritating sneer."

"Point him out to me when we reach the street," I said, humoring what I thought to be a fancy, "and I'll put a head on him."

The sneer was probably meant for an ogle. Beauty has its annoyances, as well as its compensations. As we came under the glare of the outside lights Phyllis' hand tightened on my arm.

"Look! There he is, and he is making for us."

At the sight of that face, with its hooked nose, its waxed mustache and imperial, I took a deep breath and held it. In the quick glance I saw that his right arm hung stiffly at his side. I attempted to slip into the crowd, but without success. He lifted his hat, smiling into the astonished face of Phyllis.

"The Princess Hildegarde"— But with those three words the sentence on his lips came to an end. Amazement replaced the smile. He stepped back. Phyllis' eyes expressed scornful surprise. What she understood to be rudeness I knew to be a mistake. He had mistaken her to be Gretchen, just as I had mistaken Gretchen to be Phyllis. It was a situation which I enjoyed. All this was but momentary. We passed on.

"Was the man crazy?" asked Phyllis as we moved toward the carriages, where we saw Pembroke waving his hand.

"Not exactly crazy," I answered.

"The Princess Hildegarde. Did he not call me that?"

"He did."

"He must have mistaken me for some one else, then."

"The very thing," said I. "I wonder what he is doing here in London?"

"Mercy! Do you know him?"

"Slightly." We were almost at the carriage. "I am sorry to say that he is a great personage in this very court which you are so soon to grace."

"How strange! I'm afraid we shan't get on."

Pembroke and I dismissed our carriage. We were going back to the club. Ethel and her husband were already seated in their carriage.

Said Phyllis as I assisted her to enter, "And who is this Princess Hildegarde?"

He lifted his hat, smiling into the astonished face of Phyllis.

"The most beautiful woman in all the world," I answered, with enthusiasm. "You will meet her also."

"I do not believe I shall like her either," said Phyllis. "Good night." And the door swung to.

CHAPTER XVII.

I had just left the office when I ran into Pembroke, who was in the act of mounting the stairs. It was Saturday morning. Phyllis had left town.

"Hello!" he cried. "A minute more and I should have missed you, and then you would not have learned a piece of news."

"News?"

"Yes. I have made up my mind not to go home till February."

"What changed your plans so suddenly?" I asked.

"My conscience."

"In heaven's name, what has your conscience to do with your plans?"

"Well, you see, my conscience would not permit me to meet such a remarkable woman as Miss Landors without becoming better acquainted with her." He swung his cane back and forth.

"This is very sudden," said I, lighting a cigar. "When did it happen?"

"What time did she come into your office the other day?"

"It must have been after 11."

"Then it happened about 11:15." Pembroke's eyes were dancing. "Do you—er—think there are any others?"

"Thousands," said I, "only"— I turned the end of my cigar around to see if the light had proved effective.

"Only what?"

"Only she won't have them."

"Then there is really a chance?"

"When a woman is not married, there is always a chance," said I wisely. "But let me tell you, cousin mine, she has a very high ideal. The man who wins her must be little less than a demigod and a little more than a man. Indeed her ideal is so high that I did not reach it by a good foot."

Pembroke looked surprised. "She—ah—rejected"—

"I did not say that I had proposed to her," said I.

"If you haven't, why haven't you?"

"It is strange." As his face assumed an anxious tinge, I laughed. "My dear relative, go ahead and win her, if you can. You have my best wishes. She is nothing to me. There was a time—ah, well, we all can look back and say that. If it isn't one woman it's another."

Sunshine came into Pembroke's face again. "Ideal or not ideal, I am going to make the effort."

"Success to you!" patting his shoulder. He was good to look at, and it was my opinion that Phyllis might do worse. We miss a good deal in this world by being overparticular.

We were coming into Trafalgar. Nelson stood high up in the yellow fog.

"Nature is less gracious than history sometimes," mused Pembroke, gazing up. "She is doing her best to dull the luster of the old gentleman. Ah, those were days when they had men."

"We have them still," said I. "It is not the men, but the opportunities which are lacking."

"Perhaps that is so. Yet, it is the great man who makes them."

I was thinking of Hillars. "I would give a good deal for a regiment and a bad moment for our side." There was no mighty column in his memory, scarcely a roll of earth. "What do you want to do?" I asked. "Shall we hail a cab and drive to the park?"

"Just as you say, if it is not interfering with your work."

"Not at all."

"Have a cigar," said Pembroke after we had climbed into the cab and arranged our long legs comfortably. "The London cab is all very well for a short and thin person. These came to me directly from Key West."

"That is one of the joys of being rich," said I. "Gold is Aladdin's lamp. I have to take my chances on getting good tobacco in this country."

"Talking about gold"— he began.

"Don't!" I entreated.

"I was about to say that I drew on my bankers for £20,000 this morning."

"You intend to go in for a figure abroad, then?"

"Oh, no. I deposited the money in another bank—in your name."

"Mine! Deposited £20,000 in my name?" I gasped.

"Just so."

"I understood you to say, because you thought me to be a gentleman, that you weren't going to do anything like this? Have I done something to change your opinion?"

"Of course not. And I never said that I should not do it. You may or may not use it—that is as you please. But, so far as I am concerned, it will stay there and accumulate interest till the crack of doom. It isn't mine any more. If I were not almost your brother, I dare say you might justly take offense at the action. As it is," complacently, "you will not only accept the gift, but thank me for it."

"How old are you?" I asked.

"Exactly 25."

"I thought that you could not be older than that. Aren't you afraid to be so far away from home?"

Pembroke lay back and laughed. "You haven't thanked me yet."

"I must get a new tailor," said I. "What, shall I pay a tailor to make a well dressed man out of me, and then become an object of charity? Do I look, then, like a man who is desperately in need of money?"

"No, you don't look it. That's because you are clever. But what is your salary to a man of your brains?"

"It is bread and butter and lodging."

He laughed again. To laugh seemed to be a part of his business. "Jack, I haven't a soul in the world but you. I have only known you three days, but it seems that I have known you all my life. I have so much money that I cannot even fritter away the income."

"It must be a sad life," said I.

"And if you do not accept the sum in the spirit it is given I'll double it, and then you'll have trouble. You will be a rich man, then, with all a rich man's cares and worries."

"You ought to have a trustee to take care of your money."

"It would be a small matter to bribe him off. Jack, of course you do not need the money now, but that is no sign you may not in the days to come. I have known many journalists. They were ever improvident. I want to make an exception in your case. You understand; the money is for your old age."

"Let me tell you why a newspaper man is improvident. He earns money only to spend it. He has a fine scorn for money as money. He cares more for what a dollar spent has bought than what five saved might buy."

"Poor creditors!" was the melancholy interpolation. I passed over this and went on: "It is the work which absorbs his whole attention. He begins at the bottom of the ladder, which is in the garret. First, he is running about the streets at 2 and 3 in the morning in rain and snow and fog. The contact with the lower classes teaches him many things. He becomes the friend of the policeman and the vagabond. And as his mind grows broader his heart grows in proportion. It is the comparing of the great and small which makes us impartial and philosophical. Well, soon the reporter gets better assignments and shorter hours. He meets the noted men and women of the city. Suddenly from the city editor's desk his ambition turns to Washington. He succeeds there. He now comes into the presence of distinguished embassadors, ministers and diplomatists. He acquires a polish and a smattering of the languages. His work becomes a feature of his paper. The president chooses him for a friend. He comes and goes as he wills. Presently his eye furtively wanders to Europe. The highest ambition of a journalist, next to being a war correspondent, is to have a foreign post. In this capacity he meets the notable men and women of all countries. He speaks to princes and grand dukes and crowned heads. In a way he becomes a personage himself, a man whom great men seek. And he speaks of the world as the poet did of the fall of Pompeii, 'part of which I was and all of which I saw.' Ah," as my mind ran back over my own experiences, "what man with this to gain would care for money, a thing which would dull his imagination and take away the keen edge of ambition and make him play a useless part in this kingly drama of life!"

"I like your frankness," said Pembroke. "I have no doubt that journalism is the most fascinating profession there is. Yet you must not accuse the rich of being ambitionless. I have known of rich men losing their all to make papers for men who are ambitious to be foreign correspondents." The young fellow was brimming with raillery. "I have never tried to run a newspaper, but I am, notwithstanding your tirade, ambitious. I am desirous to wed Miss Landors."

The cab was now rolling along the row.

"A truly great ambition," I admitted. "After all, what greater ambition is there than to marry the woman you love? Philip, I will accept your gift in the spirit it is given, and I'll make use of it in the days to come when I am old and rusted. I understand your motive. You are happy and wish every one to be."

"That's the idea," said he, leaning back and spreading an arm behind my shoulders.

"But not all the money in the world nor all the fame, for that matter, would make me happy." Gretchen was so far away! "Very well, we'll go to Paris together. That is as far as I go. To follow her you will have to go alone."

"And why can't you go the rest of the way?"

"Work. I must be back in town in three days. You must not forget that I have had my vacation. There is plenty to be done."

"Now that you are comparatively wealthy, why not give up the grind, as you call it?"

"The truth is I must work. When a man works, he forgets."

"Then you have something to forget?"

"Every man who has reached the age of 30 has something to forget," said I.

I was gloomy. In my pocket I had the only letter I had ever received from Gretchen. Every hour fate outdoes the romancer. The story she had written for me was a puzzling one. And the finis? Who could say? Fate is more capricious than the novelist. Sometimes you can guess what he intends for an end; what fate has in store, never. Gretchen's letter did not begin as letters usually do. It began with "I love you" and ended with the same sentence. "In November my marriage will take place. Do not come abroad. I am growing strong now. If I should see you, alas, what would

SENATOR CLAPP.

The nomination of Moses E. Clapp, of St. Paul, by the Republican caucus, to succeed the late Senator Davis, was a master-stroke on the part of the Republican party of the state, and a victory not only for Clapp, but for the people of Minnesota, who had been deprived by death of an honest and brilliant representative, and who were in danger of being offered a substitute with interests and sympathies not in accord with theirs. That danger, lying in the candidacy of Thos Lowry, was averted, and the nomination of Moses E. Clapp was made in direct answer to the demands of the masses. The Republican party of the state is strengthened by Clapp's nomination, as will the public confidence in the Republican leadership of the state be strengthened. Senator Davis' death brought out admissions from the opposition parties that are sure to be turned into a gain for the Republicans. His genius and his statesmanship have been paraded, his success as a representative of the people has been loudly and universally admitted,—and he belonged to and was a pillar of the Republican party. Then came the senatorial contest for his successor. The Democratic press of the state, little dreaming of the outcome, sung Clapp's praises, thinking of course that Lowry or Evans would be the nominee. Clapp was portrayed as a man of the people, with great personal magnetism and towering ability. This was the truth, and in future Republican Senator Clapp need only go over the record of his Democratic indorsements for a character. But he is the Republican nominee for senater now, and we look for a different story from Democratic sources.

All these facts do not escape the independent voter.

HEALTHY SENTIMENTS.

The St. Pioneer Press in the following strong editorial, expresses some wholesome sentiments, which are doubtless shared by nine tenths of the rank and file of the Republican party of the state, and are reproduced on that account, although the candidacy of Lowry is a thing of the past since Clapp's nomination:

"There is no ground upon which Mr. Lowry can claim the support of any honorable and loyal Republican. He is not only identified with large railroad interests, which are arrayed against the public demand for regulative and restrictive legislation, but in his street railway companies he represents the worst forms of corporate monopoly and is directly responsible for the worst and most aggravated evils of an enormous, fictitious capitalization, with its corresponding burdens of interest which are assessed upon the people of the cities in their thrall, not only in excessive fares, but in poor and impoverished equipment and in a scanty and inadequate service. To resist the popular demand for better and cheaper service and to escape their equitable share of the public burdens these street railway agencies of political and municipal corruption, debauching our city councils and under accusation of attemping even to bribe the governor of the state. They have become practiced adepts in all the arts of corrupting influence which has now been brought into the senatorial contest in the candidacy of Mr. Lowry. It was a clean and honest and open contest upon the simple merits of the candidates before he came into the field. And now it has been already converted into a public scandal.

It has been done not long ago in Montana to its everlasting shame and disgrace. But it cannot be done in Minnesota. The legislature of Minnesota is not the board of aldermen of the city of St. Paul. Personally a royal good fellow, an inimitable story teller, free handed, liberal, large hearted, Mr. Lowry is an impossible candidate. His election would be a disaster to the Republican party of Minnesota which could not be overcome for many years. Its worst enemies never framed an indictment against the Republican party so blasting as the charge and sentence it would pronounce against itself in the election of Thomas Lowry to the United States senate. Every newspaper in the state except his organs, the St Paul Dispatch and the Minneapolis Tribune, would ring with denunciations of the men responsible for this degradation of the Republican party. No, it is not possible. The seat of the lamented Cushman K. Davis in the U. S. senate is not for sale. Once before an attempt was made to make merchandise of it And every man who in violation of his pledges sold his vote on that occasion, was marked and branded with such odium that he was compelled to remove from the state. The men who vote for Mr Lowry will have to reckon with their constituents."

QUEEN VICTORIA.

Queen Victoria died at Osborn house Tuesday, Jan 22, at 6:30 p. m., of paralysis, induced by old age and mental anxiety.

In the death of Queen Victoria America loses one of her staunchest and her most powerful friend, and the tribute paid her memory by lowering the White House flag will be indorsed by the people of this country, although it is the first incident of the kind on record.

The world's almost impulsive affection for Queen Victoria is wonderful and most touching. The queen's subjects have been growing to love her more and more from day to day for many years. She has amazingly strengthened and blessed the empire, and her personal virtue, wisdom and charms have lifted the British crown far above the breakers of popular suspicion.

Tremendous responsibility will rest upon her successor, who will have a mighty charge intrusted to him. No empire in the history of nations ever possessed nobler traditions of monarchy than will Victoria bequeth to Great Britain's future king.

She reigned for sixty-three years, and the name "Queen Victoria" has had that mystic heart-touch possessed by the fond memories that cluster about the revered in childhood and youth—for but few are living to-day who were past youth when Victoria was crowned queen.

Kitchener might vary the form of his dispatches by merely saying, "De Wet has slopped over again."

Before ending the war in South Africa again the British would do well to consult the Boers, who appear to have something to say in the matter.

The girl with the auburn hair may make a hit in Kansas City, but the girl with the Belgian Hare, according to the Florence Bulletin, is the winner in central Kansas.

The population statistics just published show Red Lake Falls to lead every city in this section of Minnesota excepting Crookston and East Grand Forks. While we were disappointed in not reaching the 2,000 mark, yet we must feel gratified at the showing made. In 1890 our population was 774; in 1895, 1002, and in 1900. 1.885. This is a splendid showing, and there is no reason why, in the next five years, we should not grow to be a city of 4000 people.

Illustrative of the talk on the River and Harbor bill in the House, Representative Capron, of R. I., tells this story of a bill carrying a big appropriation that passed the legislature of that State when he was a member. "One of the members said: 'Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear some explanation of this enormous expenditure. Not that I intend to oppose it. I think I shall vote for the bill. But we ought to be told what the money is for.' Thereupon a fat German member replied: 'Why should ve eksplain? Ve haf de wotes. Dere is no need of explanation'."

THE RATIFICATION MEETING.

Friday evening a large crowd gathered in the Assembly Room of the High School to hear the program which was prepared by the H. S. O. The meeting was held for the purpose of making a formal presentation of the piano to the school district. At eight o'clock sharp the program commenced with the song "Calm was the Night," by eight girls. Next was the piano duet by Eleanor Findeisen and Eva Marchildon, which received its well earned share of applause. Following this was the Presentation Speech by Josephine Kaus, president of the H. S. O. and she delivered it as though she was in the habit of making one every day. Mr. Jensen made the Acceptance speech which was greatly appreciated by all. Miss Renquist then kindly consented to recite a piece entitled "The Revenge" and as an encore recited "Very Peculiar." The song "Dream Faces" was sung by a quartet comprising Pauline Neiland, Eva Marchildon, Drew Marshall and Scott Hall. Josephine Kaus played a piano solo which was followed by the recitation "The Newsboy's Debt" by Eleanor Eindeisen. Lulu Fletcher was the next on the program and sang "In the Shadow of the Pines." Norman Schreiter's instrumental solo was so well appreciated that he was encored. After this came the dialogue "An Escapade" rendered by fifteen high school pupils, Dora Marchand playing the leading role of "Blanche Seaton." This was very good and well appreciated. As the crowd dispersed the H. S. A. A. yell could be heard issuing from room 6 and this proved to be the end of the program. About three hundred were in attendance and it is hoped all enjoyed the efforts made by the H. S. O.

The Freshman class met Tuesday night.

The Juniors and Seniors have begun to study Wordsworth.

The morning recitation periods have been changed in the High School.

Very neat little programs were handed every body at the door Friday night.

The decorating committee got out at last and decorated the school room for Friday night.

Some of the pupils in Miss Benedict's room have an extra lesson in arithmetic every day in the laboratory.

One lesson a day in English for the Sophomores is not enough so they take two, putting in extra time from four till six.

The Crookston Journal has taken a spurt ahead within the last ten days that has attracted considerable attention. The reports of the tri-state drainage convention would have done credit to a metropolitan daily, and the excellence and completeness which characterized this service, has entered into every feature of the paper. A new $3,200 linotype (typecasting) machine has just been put in.

Over in Beltrami county there is a printing scandal. The paper having the highest bid got the work. Later it was discovered that Commissioner Wright, whose vote made the deal possible, had not qualified, and friends of the News, the paper turned down, will bend every effort to have the vacancy thus caused, filled by a man friendly to its interests. And there is blood on the moon.

Healy & Bourdon have decided to branch out. They have already opened a land office at Mentor and will at once open one at Thief River Falls. They are making preparations for the rush that is expected in the spring, and their efforts will be to supply the vacant and other lands in this county with practical and progressive farmers.

Fred Wilkins, who was the band sawyer at our mill last summer, writes from Howdens, N. C., that he has a position with the McMillan & Miller Lumber Co., and says he advises no one but a filer or sawyer to go there, as the common labor is all done by negroes at 50c a day. Setters get $1.50 per day. Mr. Wilkins does not like the country and expresses his determination to return north at his first opportunity.

He has been a resident of the city for several years, and served as county attorney during the past term.

Upon request of P. M. Mrs. E. F. Marshall, J. Smith, of St. Paul, assistant superintendent of Star Routes, came up yesterday to investigate the work as being done by John I. between this point and Crookston. After getting a late start, Mr. Smith says he rather enjoyed the novelty of coming over in a surrey, behind John's team, which skuted all the way at a speed that would entitle them to championship honors among the shoeless class. Upon his arrival here he revealed his identity to the mail carrier, who apologized for his poor turnout, laying stress upon the fact that a better one would have been provided for this trip had he known. It is likely that, as a result of Mrs. Marshall's efforts, we will have an improvement in the service.

Bill to Enable Wilhelmina to Marry and Yet Remain Queen.

In order to hold the throne the Dutch sovereign cannot marry without the consent of her parliament. She may marry otherwise, but in that case would inexorably have to renounce the throne. Therefore two bills are about to be put before the states general, the first giving the parliamentary consent to Queen Wilhelmina's marriage to Duke Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and the second granting full naturalization to the duke, as well as deciding upon his future title. Temporarily this title is that of prince consort. Preparations for the wedding are being hurried along.

CLAPP FOR SENATOR

ST. PAUL MAN NAMED BY REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

Two Men Perish in Minneapolis Fires—Minnesota Railroad Rates Discussed Before the Industrial Commission—Smallpox Disappears from Logging Camps.

St. Paul, Jan. 21.—The Minnesota Republicans in caucus nominated Moses E. Clapp for the short term in the senate to succeed the late Cushman K. Davis. The break for Clapp came when Congressman Tawney announced his withdrawal from the race. But one ballot was taken and before it was ended it was seen Clapp had votes to spare. It was then made unanimous.

MOSES E. CLAPP.

First Session Deadlocked.

St. Paul, Jan. 21.—The caucus of the Republican members of the legislature for the purpose of nominating a successor to the late United States Senator C. K. Davis resulted in a deadlock after 14 ballots were cast. The last ballot stood: Evans 53, Clapp 45, Bixby 7, Tawney 29, Lowry 5 and McCleary 2.

BURNED TO DEATH.

George Bard and Emil Krutzburg Meet Horrible Fate in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, Jan. 22.—After building a good fire in a little stove and falling fast asleep at his miserable home George Nelson Bard was burned to death before he could awake at 24 First street, south. The place he called home was a mere hovel, an attic-like apartment.

It was on the eve of his departure for the poor farm and one of his last acts was to call on his son, Roy Bard, who is confined in the county jail on a charge of burglary and give to him the few pennies which represented his entire wealth.

For 18 years the son had been his crippled father's sole support and now that he was under arrest there was nothing for the old man to do but throw himself upon the community and accept the charity offered at the poor farm.

He bade his old time friends goodbye and returned to his attic to spend his last night outside of the poorhouse. He built a good fire in the dingy stove and sat down near it. Finally he fell asleep.

A woman passing through the alley saw a light in the second story window of the building and called the attention of others to it. As there was every reason to believe that there was a fire in the room neighbors hurried up the rickety stair and broke down the door.

The last remnant of the old man's clothing was then burning, while he laid in the corner of the room a charred mass—and dead. The fire department was summoned, but its services were not needed.

Emil Krutzburg, for 15 years a resident of Minneapolis, came to his death of a lamp explosion. About 3 a. m. a woman passing up the stairs at Krutzburg's restaurant, 319 Second street north, noticed that the hall lamp had a peculiar appearance. The chimney was off and there was fire in the globe. She immediately gave the alarm and Mr. Krutzburg, whose room was near by, rushed out. He seized the lamp just as it exploded. His clothing became ignited, and, although lodgers immediately covered him with blankets, he was badly burned. He was removed to the city hospital, where he died during the afternoon.

RIGHTS TO HIGHWAYS.

Telephone Franchise Expired, but State Law Protects Company.

Duluth, Jan. 21.—Judge Cant has filed a decision in the case of the city of Duluth against the Duluth Telephone company, brought to stop the company from doing business in the City of Duluth. The company claims the right to maintain wires on streets of the city under the state law giving telephone companies rights on highways in the state. The city contended that this did not cover streets of the city. Judge Cant decides for the company, holding that the streets are highways within the meaning of the act, and that, though its franchise has expired, the company has rights obtained by reliance on the state law that cannot be taken from it.

Pension for Major Davis.

Washington, Jan. 17.—At the opening of the session of the senate a bill granting a pension of $50 a month to Horatio N. Davis, father of the late Senator Davis of Minnesota, was passed. Mr. Davis was a captain in the commissary department.

The Masonic block at Detroit has been destroyed by fire.

Charles Gray, a 5-year-old boy, was killed by a street car at St. Paul.

George N. Bard and Emil Krutzberg were burned to death at Minneapolis Sunday.

Hotel Buckman, at Little Falls, was destroyed by fire Saturday. Loss $50,000.

The state supreme court has sustained the validity of the Minneapolis wineroom ordinance.

Aslak and Even Haldal of Nelsville, father and son, have been adjudged insane and removed to the asylum at Fergus Falls.

Three alleged cases of smallpox have been discovered at Stillwater, and all the schools were closed. There is a suspicion, however, that the cases quarantined are not smallpox.

The state board of health has passed a resolution directing all large manufacturing, railroad and other companies employing large numbers of men to insist upon the successful vaccination of their employes.

A number of prominent Duluth men are planning a new proposition for the consideration of the Minnesota legislature relative to legislation calculated to promote the establishment of iron and steel industries in this state on an extensive scale.

The state railroad commission has notified the legal advisors of the iron ore roads that it would not be able to give an answer to the petition for a reopening of the rate question for some days. The commission says it has been too busy to act upon the matter.

Alger, Smith & Co. are running five camps of about 600 men on their Duluth and Northern Minnesota road, and are delivering three train loads of logs (300,000 feet) daily. This week they will increase another train daily. They are also running two camps at Pigeon river and will get out about 10,000,000 feet there.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Monday, Jan. 14.

Both branches of the legislature held brief evening sessions after a four days' recess. Three or four unimportant bills were introduced in the house and referred, but the senate transacted no business whatever. It simply met and adjourned after roll call.

Tuesday, Jan. 15.

Lieutenant Governor Smith announced the senate committees. About 15 bills were introduced. The house session was brief. The announcement of standing committees was the principal business.

Wednesday, Jan. 16.

Senate defeated the house resolution for a joint reapportionment committee. Bill introduced to increase the tax levy of Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth for school purposes.

In the house Representative Sweet introduced a bill increasing the penalty for kidnapping. Bill also introduced to create a state board of control.

Thursday, Jan. 17.

Resolutions in the senate to investigate the cause of the difference between the provisions of H. F. 23 as passed by the legislature of 1899 and the form in which it appeared before the governor. The bill relates to the taxation of express companies. Two unimportant bills passed.

Bill introduced in the house to pay the state oil inspector a salary of 2,400 yearly. Another new bill increases the gross earnings tax on express companies to 6 per cent.

Friday, Jan. 18.

Bill in the house for more stringent divorce laws. Members of joint committee named to investigate discrepencies in the law taxing express companies.

In the senate the Lind appointments again failed of confirmation. Decision reached to stand firm for representation on the joint reapportionment committee.

Saturday, Jan. 19.

Both houses held brief sessions but practically no business was transacted. Two bills were introduced in the house and one in the senate. The senatorial caucus in the afternoon caused an early adjournment.

Named by Van Sant.

The governor has appointed the following officials: W. C. Mastermann, Stillwater, surveyor general of logs and lumber at Stillwater; A. B. Robbins, Minneapolis, surveyor general of logs and lumber at Minneapolis; John O'Donnell, Minneapolis, state labor commissioner; Walter Hammond, St. Paul, deputy labor commissioner; Dr. Bracken, Minneapolis, member of the state board of health.

Elmer H. Dearth has been appointed insurance commissioner.

Married to a Minnesotan.

Minneapolis, Jan. 16.—Mrs. M. E. Wilson has received tidings of the death in South Africa of her son-in-law, Captain Henry Fitz-Herbert, as a result of wounds received in Sunday's fighting with the Boers near Koalfontein. Captain Fitz-Herbert was quite well known in Minneapolis, having in 1895 married Miss Mary O. Wilson, who is now in Minneapolis with her mother.

TRAGEDY OF A LIFE.

Sailor Deserted by Friends Dies Alone on a Barren Island.

His Skeleton Found in His Bunk with a Diary by His Side in Which He Had Recorded His Terrible Experiences.

On Unimak island, which guards one of the entrances to the Behring sea, a rude mound of rocks marks the last resting place of Charles William Anderson, sailor, fisherman and hunter.

Anderson starved to death on the bleak and barren island waiting for friends who deserted him. He died on June 19, 1899, and his skeleton in his bunk and his diary beside it were found by two hunters who were driven on the island during a storm.

The diary was addressed to Andrew Groswald, of Unga, who arrived at San Francisco a few days ago with his friend's last writings.

Several vessels passed by his island prison, the pathetic record reads, but none saw Anderson's flag of distress. Once a vessel was becalmed close to the shore and he tried to reach it, but he had not the strength left to launch his little boat. His legs had failed him and he could only pull himself along by his elbows.

He deliberated on shooting his dog, Dempsey, but he could not screw up courage to do it. [illegible] "and I [illegible]." Finally Dempsey disappeared.

The diary records the terrible sufferings of Anderson from thirst and his sensations after fresh water. The last entry says:

"Monday, June 19. Now I must go for water again. I am more afraid this time than before. But with God's help I may come back again. I would not die in a cold storm. But God's will be done."

He had his wish, for he returned and died in his bunk.

WEDDED AFTER SIXTY YEARS.

Lovers Who Quarreled and Separated in 1840 Married in Old Age.

Sixty years ago Fisher W. Griswold, then 25 years of age, was engaged to marry pretty Matilda Brown, aged 23, both of whom resided in Naples, N. Y. A lovers' quarrel separated the two and Griswold went west, where he acquired considerable wealth as a stock man. Matilda in the meantime was wedded to John Whitman and after his death struggled many years to support herself and family.

Last August Griswold returned to Naples to spend the remainder of his life. There he met Mrs. Whitman, a woman of 83, and last Saturday they were married at the home of F. A. Moushan, at Rochester, N. Y.

Richard Melin made several trips to St. Hilaire for lumber last week.

Ray Lindquist has been on the sick-list, but is gradually improving.

Alfred Lindquist, Hjalmar and Annie Johnson were among those who braved the strom from St. Hilaire last week Tuesday.

Andrew Eiken, Postmaster at Crookston, passed through here Saturday. Mr. Eiken has many friends here who are always glad to see him.

J. P. Larson, Axel Crown and Swan Scholin, drove to Red Lake Falls last Tuesday. They had to stay over at Wylie on account of the snow-storm.

J. J. Hill is improving his depot here, a little at a time. Saturday he sent up an old coal shovel, and a second hand broom to be used there. We have a stove but no poker—hope to get that later on.

Geo. Purvis, of Crookston, who is the Great Northern land department representative for this section, was here last Thursday with a party of land seekers. Mr. Purvis predicts a great rush here this spring.

C. A. Melin has bought a feed-mill and a wind mill. This is one of the signs of the times, and shows that our farmers are gradually taking unto themselves the comforts and conveniences of the progressive ones in older and richer sections of the country. The time is not far distant when every farmer will own a windmill and the accessories with which to saw wood, churn the butter run the fanning mill and the like, besides pumping the water.

On Tuesday last the first real blizzard of the winter swept over this part of the country. In the morning a soft breeze was blowing from the South. Later in the day it began to blow from the North, heavy snow flakes fell, which in a short time became gradually fine, the wind came up with greater velocity, and the loose snow was flying high above our chimney tops. The wind was not cold owing to the mild weather previous. We hope that our readers were in their homes at that time. It was prophesied that we were to have a very hard winter. We are glad that such predictions did not come true, as we especially needed a mild winter, when there is but little to feed stock on.

Winter Skirts.

Plain skirts are considered very smart, but that does not by any means signify that trimmed skirts have gone out of fashion. Quite the contrary, for the dressmakers are all busy turning out skirts that show the greatest quantity of fine work, and it really must needs tax the ingenuity of the designers to evolve so many new ideas all the time. A good illustration of this is shown in a satin and net gown that is made of a delicate shade of rose pink. The body of the skirt is of rose pink accordion plaited net trimmed with two wide bands of silk or satin of exactly the same shade cut in pointed scallops at both sides. The points of the scallops are held together with bands of pink ruching, and on the foot of the skirt between the points are large flowers of exactly the same shade of pink. The waist of the pink net has a fichu of the same and a dainty trimming of lace just in front, while a high draped belt of green velvet carries out the coloring of a pink rose, which was evidently the plan of the gown.—Harper's Bazar.

A Tailor Made Costume.

The tailor made costume represented is of drab serge, the skirt ornamented with two bands of violet taffetas running down the front and round the bottom. The collar and lapels are faced with violet panne, and the corsage and sleeves are trimmed with violet taffetas.—Paris Herald.

Time to Oil Up.

Like every other complex machine, the human body has its periods for repair. Sleep is Nature's time for rest, when the repair shops of the brain make good the damage of the waking hours. The man who cannot sleep, or who suffers from headache, nervousness, lost appetite, indigestion, heart trouble or pain, is running with a hot box. Give the tired brain and worn-out nerves a chance to rest. Stop! It is time to oil up.

"LaGrippe left me with shattered nerves and a weakened heart. I was short of breath, my heart fluttered and I was so nervous and irritable that I could not sleep. The first two doses of Dr. Miles' Nervine brought me relief. Five bottles invigorated my whole system and cured me. Although I am 88 years old I am as strong and hearty to-day as most men are at 60."

Pepsin preparations often fail to relieve indigestion because they digest only albuminous foods. There is one preparation that digests all classes of food, and that is Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It cures the worst cases of indigestion and gives instant relief, for it digests what you eat. W. A. Schreiter.

Sanders.

Mr. and Mrs. N.K. Anderson entertained Mr. and Mrs. R. Aseby, Mr. and Mrs. Skerdall and her mother, Mrs. Banken, last Sunday.

G. Thompson, J. Skordal and H. Lund, who went to work in the pineries the first part of this month, have sent word that they are working at $2 a month.

The recent blizzard while severe, luckily did not result in any fatalities of mishaps in this vicinity, so far as your correspondent is able to learn. Many teams and rigs were caught, and it was necessary to call on friends for lodgings, and their hospitalities were gladly granted. The reports of teams lost, etc., which are current, are evidently not founded on fact.

Persons who suffer from indigestion cannot expect to live long, because they cannot eat the food required to nourish the body and the products of the undigested foods they do eat poison the blood. It is important to cure indigestion as soon as possible, and the best method of doing this is to use the preparation known as Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat and restores all the digestive organs to perfect health. W. A. Schreiter.

The House we Keep.

Professor Ellen H. Richards, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has arranged to supply The Delineator with six articles in relation to various problems of housekeeping. The first article appears in the February number and is devoted to "The House We Keep," touching in a general way on the details of house arrangements. Just one sentence will illustrate the line of her thought. She says, "The educated woman of the twentieth century will plan her kitchen before she settles upon her parlor."

No Right To Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health: If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best known medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store.

His Life was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with Typhoid Fever that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I could not even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave me great relief. I continued to use, and am now well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all Throat and Lung Troubles. Regular sizes 50 cents and $1.00. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store; every bottle guaranteed.

WOMAN AND FASHION.

A Smart Gown For the House—A Drab Serge Tailor Made Costume.

The sketch portrays a charming gown in old rose faced cloth. Perpendicular rows of black stitching adorn either side of the front, while the left side is further ornamented with a fancifully arranged fold of black satin and three fancy metal buttons. Two narrow shaped flounces bordered with black satin trim the lower edge, and one encircles the upper part.

The bodice opens in the middle of the front and is trimmed at the waist with a wide band of lace, over which pass the satin straps, extending from shoulders to belt, and enriched with buttons. In the interior is a narrow vest of tinsel brocade opening on a full plastron of white chiffon falling from a pointed yoke of white lace. The collar band is of the lace, while the turnover collar is of the brocade. The belt is of black satin almost covered with lace. The short bell sleeve of cloth is ornamented with a wide band of lace, with straps of satin crossing it and fastened down with the buttons. The full undersleeve is of plaited chiffon gathered into a cuff of brocade.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CHARMING HOUSE GOWN.

MORGAN'S GIFT TO ART.

New York Banker Presents to Metropolitan Museum a Valuable Collection of Greek Ornaments.

In the most informal manner, J. Pierpont Morgan made a princely donation to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, of the New York city, the other day. It consists of a collection of ancient Greek ornaments for which he is said to have paid $200,000.

The collection was bought from a London art dealer. One of the Rothschilds, it is said, was anxious to obtain it, but Mr. Morgan anticipated him.

The articles were wrought principally in gold, some of the ornamentation being in silver. Inscriptions on some of them show that they were made about 350 B. C. in Albia, where Ionian Greeks from Miletus had established a colony after that city had been sacked by the Persians.

In the collection is a gold-embossed mask of a young woman, with a Greek inscription of four lines in repousse work. The mask is in perfect condition. There is a large gold crown about four inches in length and eight inches in diameter. A heavy gold necklace of beautiful Greek workmanship has ten golden amphorae as pendants and a large mask as a centerpiece. The necklace is in fine granulated work.

The other articles are a gold and silver bridal wreath of unique design and in perfect condition, a large gold wreath of ivy leaves, two gold-winged statuettes representing musicians playing Pan's pipes, and a gold ram of granulated workmanship.

The ornaments evidently had been the property of a king, a prince, or a wealthy nobleman.

SOUTH PACIFIC CHARTS.

Startling Discoveries Made by Fish Commission Steamer Albatross.

The fish commission steamer Albatross, which returned the other day after 14 months' cruise in the Pacific, made some important discoveries during the voyage. It was found that all the charts of the South Pacific are inaccurate, and that most of the islands, except Fiji and Tahiti, are placed from two to twelve miles away from their actual position. The Albatross also discovered that the temperature of the bottom of the sea at all depths from 500 fathoms to the greatest depths obtainable is the same—35 degrees Fahrenheit. Between the surface and 2,500 fathoms down they found edible shrimp, varying in size from half an inch to a foot in length. The Albatross broke the record for deep sea dredging, dragging the bottom at 4,300 fathoms. The greatest depth ever dragged before was 3,600 fathoms, by the British ship Challenger, in 1876. In the Behring sea the Albatross found at a place where the charts show 2,000 fathoms that the depth is only 200 fathoms.

BLACKDUCK BOOMING

A SECOND WINNIPEG GROWING UP IN THE WILDS OF BELTRAMI CO.

CORNER LOTS SELLING HIGH—PROPRIETOR OF SITE HAS GOLD MINE.

A real live boom is on over in Blackduck, the new town which has been platted by Co. Surveyor D. N. Stoner, of Beltrami county, two and a half miles east of Blackduck lake. Theo Pichette, and Jack Pasha, of this city, and Conrad Lajambe, of Lambert, have been over there, and bought six business lots for which they paid $1200 spot cash. Lajambe and Pichette returned to the city yesterday. They report a population anywhere between 700 and 1000. About seventy-five houses are already built and more going up as fast as the carpenters can erect them. Every line of business is already well represented. Stoner bought this quarter section on which the town is being built, for $2500 from the original homesteader, and to date has realized over $50,000 from the sale of lots, although the town is less than three months old. Mr. Pichette will return to Blackduck next week to erect a hotel building on his recently purchased lots. The railroad is not built in yet, although work is being pushed in the cuts despite the weather, and it is not thought the road will be completed to that place until late next spring.

ANNUAL MEETING

CREAMERY ASSOCIATION MEETS AND ELECTS NEW OFFICERS.

As per call published in The Gazette, the Red Lake Falls Co-operative Creamery Association held its first regular annual meeting at the city hall on Saturday. The meeting was called to order by Jeff Porter, and the first business was the election of officers which resulted as follows:

President, Paul Rieck.
Vice President, Jeff Porter.
Treasurer, Ildaige Baril.
Secretary, Theo. Gareeau.
Directors, Wm. Schaper, Paul Cyr, Dolphis Patnaude.
Manager, Jeff Porter.

The elections were in each case unanimous, and the utmost harmony and enthusiam prevailed throughout the meeting.

The association is now building an ice house 16x20, 10-foot posts, and will shortly be ready for the spring opening. The members have been increasing their herds of milch-cows, and without counting new patrons, will have in the neighborhood of 400 cows to start with.

COMMUTATION GOES

CONGRESSMAN EDDY'S BILL FAVORING HOMESTEADERS PASSES.

SETTLERS ON CEDED RESERVATION LANDS ARE BENEFITED.

Word comes from Washington that Representative Eddy secured the passage of the senate bill to extend the commutation privilege to settlers on ceded Indian lands. It provides that the section of the revised statutes allowing homesteaders to commute their entries shall be extended to all homestead settlers who are affected by or entitled to the provisions of the free homes act. A provision is made that in commuting their entries such homesteaders shall pay the price provided in the laws under which the original entries were made. The bill will now go to the president for signature. It will enable homesteaders on Chippewa lands in Minnesota and Sioux lands in South Dakota to commute their entries and obtain patents without having to remain on them for the five years required for settlers who do not commute.

Wired the Court House.

That Register of Deeds Gibeau is a first class officer and an engineer of no mean ability, is generally known. But his latest accomplishment as an electrician has just come to light. Since the advent of the court house telephone, which is placed in his office, he has found it necessary to make many trips a day to call up the different officers, and last week decided to put in a system of call bells. These are now arranged and when any office except his own is called up on the phone he presses the button, and the electric current does the rest—thanks to his ingenuity and energy.

BROKE HIS LEG

ED GALLAGHER MEETS WITH A DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.

Ed Gallagher met with an accident Saturday afternoon that will lay him up for the balance of the winter. He was driving down Main st. on an empty woodrack, dangling his right leg on the side of the runner. At the railroad crossing the sleigh sloughed, crushing his leg between an electric light pole and the runner, fracturing the member above the ankle. He was taken to Paul's hotel and was attended by Dr. Gendron, who reduced the fracture. Gallagher lives with his wife on the Ralph farm immediately north of the city, and will be taken to his home as soon as he is able to be moved. At present he is doing nicely.

WAS HE DOPED?

STRANGE EXPERIENCE OF A THIEF RIVER FALLS MAN.

Thief River Falls, Jan. 29, Special to The Gazette.—Quite a sensation was caused here last night when Ed Dieder, who resides in the first ward, was found by M. Bothum in front of his store, in a helpless condition. Mr. Bothum at once secured assistance and carried him into the store and sent for Drs. Francis and Tupper. After an examination it was found to be a case of poisoning. The physicians, after great efforts, succeeded in restoring him, and as soon as the man could explain, he said he had taken two drinks of what he supposed was whiskey, in one of the saloons, and had no more than drank the second glass when he began to feel cramps across the abdomen, and he at once started for his home, but lost consciousness and fell.

IMPORTANT BILL

THE NEW RAILROAD GROSS EARNINGS BILL IS ABOUT READY.

PROPOSES INCREASE FROM 3 TO 4 CENTS—BACKED BY GOVERNOR.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Jan. 31.—The session of the legislature will be in earnest this week with the settling down of matters after the senatorial fight.

A number of very important bills will be introduced and it is more than probable that some of them will be passed. The committee work is well under way and reports may be expected on most of the bills already before the legislature.

The most important bill which is expected during the week is the railroad gross earnings bill. This measure will increase the tax on railroads from 3 to 4 per cent on their gross earnings. The bill, it is said, is backed by the administration and will be pushed to passage. The general opinion throughout the state is that the railroads get off too easily under the present measure as the gross earnings tax is paid in lieu of all other taxation, even assessments for local improvements in the cities being considered as taxes and therefore, not paid.

Another similar bill which will be introduced during the session will supercede the telephone gross earnings bill. This law now provides for a gross earnings tax on telephone companies and the tax is so low that the companies do not pay anywhere near their just proportion of the taxes. It is more than probable that this bill will also be passed and the companies may be left to pay their taxes on their personal property in the same manner as any other person or corporation.

EDDY AND HITCHCOCK

AGREE ON AMENDMENTS TO NELSON LAW—SITUATION CLEARER.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 31.—Representative Eddy has scored again. Secretary Hitchcock has approved the Eddy bill proposing amendments to the Nelson law. There appears to be excellent prospects that the situation respecting the Chippewas will be cleared up for the first time in many years. It is thought, however, this legislation will block the National Park scheme.

ORDERED TO LEAVE

MINNESOTA MAN MUST QUIT THE PHILIPPINES.

Editor of the Manila Daily Bulletin Said to Have Wrongfully Criticized Officials—Pine Question Before the House Committee—Northern Pacific Orders New Rolling Stock—State News in General.

Manila, Jan. 25.—General MacArthur has ordered the deportation to the United States of George T. Rice, editor of The Daily Bulletin, a marine journal. Rice will sail on the Pennsylvania next Monday. The order characterizes him as a "dangerous incendiary and a menace to the military situation."

Rice's offense was the publication of allegations that Lieutenant Commander William Braunersreuther, captain of the port, had charged excessive pilotage and moorage fees, a percentage of which he had kept for himself.

The report of Major Mills, inspector general, who investigated the allegations, completely exonerated the captain of the port and indicted the sailors and merchants who had given him information, who had been misled in figuring the rates upon the net instead of the gross tonnage, the latter being specified under the Spanish laws.

Rice was summoned to the office of the governor general's military secretary and was called upon to promise that he would publish no more such articles. He declined to give such a pledge but insisted that the article was truthful and took up a defiant attitude when threatened with deportation.

The deportation order was then issued and Rice is now awaiting the departure of the Pennsylvania. When seen in jail he reiterated his statement that the charges were true and declared that in any event the severity of the case was unmerited.

Rice came originally from Red Wing, Minn., and was formerly a member of the Minnesota volunteers.

Was Acquainted With Rice.

St. Paul, Jan. 25.—George T. Rice was a member of Company G, Thirteenth Minnesota. He is about 21, as he enlisted when 18 years of age. A member of Company D was seen who knew young Rice. He says the Red Wing boy was a bright and popular fellow. When the regiment returned to the United States Rice remained in Manila and entered into partnership with another American named Ney to engage in a newspaper enterprise.

A HARD PROBLEM.

House Committee Discusses Minnesota Pine Legislation.

Washington, Jan. 28.—The house committee on Indian affairs is divided on proposed legislation relative to disposing of Minnesota pine. Chairman Curtis is determined to pass his bill which would divide the reservation up into "white pine" districts and put in sawmills under government supervision. The Indian bureau and the interior department in general favor the Curtis bill, but will make no concessions to Congressmen Eddy and Morris, who are opposing the Curtis plan.

Before the house committee Secretary Gates of the Indian rights commission charged that the present system in Minnesota was corrupt and should be abolished.

Congressman Eddy replied very warmly, and before he had finished with Gates that official was forced to admit that the Nelson act of 1889 was a practical and businesslike piece of legislation, which had worked for the benefit of the Indians and the government alike. But in view of all the recent trouble during the past three years Eddy is willing to change that law so that the selling of pine on stump shall be superseded by selling it in the log on bank scale.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900, By Harold MacGrath.

[illegible] heart of life? We have nothing to return, you and I. I long to see you. I dare not tell you how much. Who knows what the world holds hidden? While we live there is always a perhaps. Remember that I love you!"

"'Perhaps,'" I mused absently.

"'Perhaps' what?" asked Pembroke.

"What? I had forgotten him. "Oh, it was merely a slip of the tongue." I poked the [illegible] with my cane. "We had best hunt up a lunch. I have an engagement with the American military attache at 2; so you will have to take care of yourself till dinner."

It was Prince Ernst of Wortumborg.

Let me tell you what happened in the military club that night. I was waiting for Colonel J. of the Queen's Light, who was to give me the plan of the fall maneuvers in Africa. Pembroke was in the billiard room showing what he knew about caroms and brandy smashes to a trio of tanned Indian campaigners. I was in the reading room perusing the evening papers. All at once I became aware of a man standing before me. He remained in that position so long that I glanced over the top of my paper.

It was Prince Ernst of Wortumborg. He bowed.

"May I claim your attention for a moment?" he asked.

Had I been in any other place than the club I should have ignored him. I possessed the liveliest hatred for the man. "If you will be brief."

"As brief as possible," dropping into the nearest chair. "It has become necessary to ask you a few questions. The matter concerns me."

"Whatever concerns you is nothing to me," I replied coldly.

He smiled. "Are you quite sure?"

I had turned the sword on myself, so it seemed. But I said: "I answered some of your questions once. I believe I was explicit."

"As to that I can say you were startlingly explicit. It is a delicate matter to profess one's regard for a woman before total strangers. It is not impossible that she would have done the same thing in your place. Her regard for you"—

I interrupted him with a menacing gesture. "I am extremely irritable," I said. "I should regret to lose control of myself in a place like this."

"To be sure!" he said. "This is England, where they knock one another down."

"We do not murder on this side of the channel," I retorted.

"That is unkind. Your friend was a very good shot," with a significant glance at his useless arm. "But for my arm and his nerves, which were not of the best order, I had not lived to speak to you tonight."

"So much the worse for the world," said I. "Your questions?"

"Ah, who was that remarkably beautiful woman under your distinguished care Thursday evening?"

"I see that our conversation is to be of the shortest duration. Who she was is none of your business," rudely. I unfolded my paper and began reading.

"Perhaps, after all," not the least perturbed by my insolence, "it were best to state on paper what I have to say. I can readily appreciate that the encounter is disagreeable. To meet one who has made a thing impossible to you sets the nerves on edge." He caught up his opera hat, his cane and gloves. He raised the lapel of his coat and sniffed at the orchid in the buttonhole.

Some occult force bade me say, "Why do you wish to know who she was?"

He sat down again. "I shall be pleased to explain. That I mistook her for another who I supposed was on the other side of the channel was a natural mistake, as you will agree. Is it not strange that I should mistake another to be the woman who is so soon to be my wife? Is there not something behind this remarkable, unusual likeness? Since when are two surpassingly beautiful women, born in different lands, of different parents, the exact likeness of each other?"

Now, as this was a thing which had occupied my mind more than once I immediately put aside the personal affair. That could wait. I threw my paper on to the table.

"Do you know, sir," said I, "that thought echoes my own?"

"Let us for the moment put ourselves into the background," said the prince. "What do you know about her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde?"

"Very little. Proceed."

"But tell me what you know."

"I know that her father was driven to a suicide's grave and that her mother died of a broken heart and that the man who caused all their misery wishes to [illegible] the daughter too."

"Scandal, all scandal," said the prince. "Who ever heard of a broken heart outside of a romantic novel? I see that the innkeeper has been holding your ear. Ah, that innkeeper; that innkeeper! Certainly some day there will come a reckoning."

"Yes, indeed," said I. "Beware of him."

"It was 20 years ago," said the prince. "It is beyond the recall. But let me proceed. Not many years ago there was a prince, a very bad fellow."

"Most of them are."

"He married a woman too good for him," went on the prince, as though he had not heard.

"Another is about to do likewise."

"There was some scandal. When the princess was born, her father refused to believe her to be his child. Now, it came to pass, as they say in the Bible, which I assure you is a very interesting book, that there were vague rumors immediately after the birth of Princess Hildegarde that another child had been born."

"What!" I was half out of my chair. "Another child?"

"Another child. The fact that the prince swore that when children came he would make them counterparts of their kind and loving father lent color to the rumor that the princess had had one spirited away to escape this threatened contamination. And one of the nurses was missing. Whither had she gone remained a mystery and is still a mystery, for she never has returned. Did she spirit away the other child, the other girl? I say girl advisedly. If there had been a son, the mother would have retained him. Two years after this interesting episode the princess died, and dying, confessed the deception. But the curious thing is nobody believed her. Her mind was not strong, and it was thought to be a hallucination, this second child. Now, let me come to the present time. Twins are generally alike. One mirrors the other. When they mature, then comes the deviation, perhaps in the color of the hair and the eyes. Behold, here are two women but for their hair and eyes were one. Tell me what you know of the other." He bent forward with subdued eagerness.

"Do you think it possible?" I cried excitedly.

"Not only possible, but probable. She is a princess; at least, she should be."

Then I told him what I knew about Phyllis.

"America! Born in America! It cannot be." He was baffled.

"I have known her for eight years," said I. "She was born in America as certainly as I was."

"But this likeness? This rumor of another daughter? Ah, there is something here I do not understand. And this uncle of hers, this Wentworth. Who is he?"

"A retired banker, very wealthy and at present with the American ministry at your own capital."

"To him we must go, then." He rose and walked the length of the room, stopped a moment at the chess table in the corner, then resumed his chair. "You are wondering, no doubt, what it is to me, all this?"

"I confess you have read my mind correctly."

"Then listen. I am a prince without a principality—a prince by courtesy, my brother ruling the principality of Wortumborg. Thus being without a principality, I am necessarily without revenues. I must replenish my very low exchequer by a marriage—a marriage not so distasteful as it might be." He met my darkening eyes with serenity. "Since Thursday night I have not been so certain of my wife's dowry. If there are two princesses, twins, they must govern jointly, or one may abdicate in favor of the other. Her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde is the one who will be most likely to relinquish her claims to Hohenphalia. If your friend is proved to be her sister"—He stroked the orchid reflectively.

"Well?" I cried, my pulse quickening.

"I shall withdraw my claim to the hand of the Princess Hildegarde. I do not care to rule half a principality or share half its revenues. There are better things left than that. It is my hope, however, that no proofs can be found and that your banker-diplomatist will show conclusively that his niece was born in America! Until this question is definitely settled my fortunes shall not undergo any risks. This is what I wanted to say to you, why I wanted to know who your friend was. Will you help me to get at the bottom of things? We are both concerned. The result will mean all or nothing to you and me. Ah, believe me, but you are a favored mortal. The friendship of the one and the love of the other! No, do not look angry. With all my sins, it cannot be said that I lack frankness and truthfulness. You love the Princess Hildegarde. I offer you an equal chance to win her. Is not that remarkably good nature? Till the affair is settled my marriage is postponed. Now, to our personal affair. You cannot blame me if I give you all my honest hatred. I am at your service after, of course, the respective positions of the princesses are assured. I should take more pleasure in shooting you or running a sword through your body than I took in the affair with your friend. His courage was truly admirable; I had nothing against him. But you have grievously wounded my self love. We forgive all wrongs but that. I warn you that the affair will not be conducted after the French mode. You have perhaps a fortnight in which to improve your marksmanship. The matter which shall carry us abroad will conclude within that time. I shoot and fence with my left hand as well as I did with my right."

"I shall be only too happy to meet you," I replied. "I prefer the pistol. There is less [illegible]."

"You shall have [illegible]," said the prince. "You will have that to nerve your arm which I shall not have—a woman's love." With a [illegible] which was not without a certain dignity and grace he walked from the room.

Phyllis a princess! Gretchen free! I sent for my coat and hat and went out. I forgot all about my appointment with Colonel J—— of the Queen's Light and that I had left Pembroke playing billiards in a strange club, where I myself had been but a guest. The crisp October air blew in my face as I rapidly walked up the mall, and it cooled the fever in my veins. But my mind ran on rather wildly. Gretchen free! Phyllis a princess! Gretchen's little word, "perhaps," came back and sang into my ears. Yet, win or lose, I was to meet the prince in mortal combat. If Phyllis was not proved Gretchen's twin sister, I should care but little for the prince's bullet. On the other hand—well, I should trust to luck. Before I was aware of my destination I stood fumbling the key in the door of my apartment. I wanted my pipe. At 11 by the clock Pembroke came in.

"Hang your apologies!" he said.

CHAPTER XVIII.

"Phyllis," said I, "do you remember the day we first met?"

We were in the morning room of the Wentworth mansion at B——. Phyllis, Pembroke and I sat before the warm grate, while Mrs. Wentworth and Ethel stood by one of the windows comparing some shades of ribbon. My presence at B—— was due to a wire I had sent to New York, which informed headquarters that I was on the track of a great sensation. The return wire had said, "Keep on it."

"When first we met?" echoed Phyllis. "Why, it was at Block Island."

"Oh," said I, "I do not refer to the time when you had shouldered the responsibilities of a society bud. I mean the time when the introduction was most informal. You were at the time selling lemonade without license and with very little lemon."

"Selling lemonade!" cried Pembroke.

"Never mind him, Mr. Pembroke," laughed Phyllis.

"It was a long time ago," I went on. "I was a new reporter. Mr. Wentworth had to be interviewed. It was one of those hot days in May. The servant at the door said that Mr. Wentworth was in the back yard—he called it the garden—where I soon found myself. You had a small table, a glass and a pitcher. I suppose every time your uncle got thirsty you sold him a glass. You wore short dresses."

"Terrible!" cried Phyllis, shielding her face with the hand screen.

"And looked as cool as the ice in the pitcher and as fresh as the flowers which lined the walls. I thought that if I bought a glass of you I might make my approach to your uncle an easier task. So I looked at you and smiled, and you giggled."

"Giggled!" cried Phyllis indignantly. Pembroke was laughing.

"Yes, actually giggled," I went on. "I laid down a 25 cent piece, and you poured out some water which had had nothing more than a mild flirtation with a lemon, and I gulped it down. I held out my hand, and you said that there wasn't any change. I smiled a false smile. Let me make a confession."

"Well?" mockingly from Phyllis.

"It was my last quarter. It was very pathetic. I had to walk four miles down town. I did not know your uncle well enough or I should have borrowed car fare from him."

"And I took your last penny?" said Phyllis gently. "Why did you not tell me then?"

"I was 22 and proud," said I. "Where are you going?" for she had risen.

"I'll be back in a moment," she said as she left the room. When she returned, she put out her hand. On the palm lay two bright American dimes.

"What's this?" I asked.

"The change."

"Very good!" laughed Pembroke.

I said nothing, but took out my wallet. In opening it to put in the dimes something fell to the floor. It was Gretchen's rose.

"What is that?" asked Phyllis, as I stooped to pick it up.

"It is the end of a story," I answered. I busied myself with the fire till the poker grew too hot.

"How many romances commonplace wallets contain!" said Pembroke sententiously.

"I have two in mine," said I.

Pembroke looked at Phyllis, but the fire seemed to be claiming her attention. Then he looked at me, but I was gazing at Phyllis. He was in a puzzle.

"Do you know, Miss Landors," he said, "that I never dreamed to meet you again when I saw you in Vienna last year?"

"Vienna?" said she. "I have never been to Vienna."

I suddenly brought down my heel on Pembroke's toes.

"Ah, a curious mistake on my part. I suppose the ball at the ministry tonight will be your first on the continent?"

I gazed admiringly at him. He had not even looked at me. He was certainly clever.

"Yes," said Phyllis, "and already I believe I am going to have what they call stage fright, though I cannot understand why I should feel that way."

"Possibly it's a premonition," said I absently.

"And of what?" asked Phyllis.

"How should I know?" said I mysteriously.

"What in the world is going on?" she demanded. "You step on Mr. Pembroke's toes, you prophesy and then you grow mysterious."

My glance and Pembroke's met. He burst out laughing. A possible contretemps was averted by the approach of Mrs. Wentworth, who asked us to have a cup of chocolate before we went out into the chill air. Finally we rose to make our departure. While Pembroke was bidding Ethel a good morning, Phyllis spoke to me.

"The last flowers you sent me were roses," she said softly.

"Were they?" said I. "I had forgotten. Shall I send you some for this evening?"

It was something in her eyes that I did not understand.

"Thank you, but Mr. Pembroke has promised to do that." And then she added, "So you have really had two romances?"

"Yes," said I, "and both ended badly."

"Let us hope that the third will be of happier termination," she smiled. The smile caused me some uneasiness.

"There never will be a third," I said. "It is strange, is it not, when you think that there might have been—but one? You will give me a waltz tonight?"

"With pleasure. Good morning."

Pembroke and I passed down the broad stairs. On the street we walked a block or so in silence.

Finally Pembroke said: "What the deuce made you step on my foot? And why does she not want me to know that she was in Vienna last winter?"

"Because," said I, "Miss Landors never was in Vienna."

"But, man, my eyes!"

"I do not care anything about your eyes."

"What makes you so positive?"

"Knowledge."

"Do you love her?" bluntly.

"No."

"Because"—

"There is another. Pembroke, tonight will be pregnant with possibilities. You will see the woman you love and the woman I love."

"What do you mean?"

"Have you ever heard of her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia?"

"So high?"

"Yes."

"Then the woman I saw in Vienna"—

"Was the princess."

"But this remarkable likeness?"

"Perhaps I had best tell you all." And when I had done his astonishment knew no bounds.

"Great George; that makes Miss Landors a princess too!"

"It does, truly. Herein lies the evil of loving above one's station. In our country love is like all things—free to obtain. We are in a country which is not free. Here those who appear to have the greatest liberty have the least."

"And she knows nothing about it?"

"Nothing."

"Why tell her?" he asked, fearful of his own love affair now.

"It is a duty. Some day she might learn too late. This afternoon I shall visit the chancellor and place the matter before him and ask his assistance. He must aid me to find the proofs."

Pembroke began kicking the snow with his toes.

"I wish you had not told me, Jack."

"It is for the best. You and I are in the same boat. We ride or sink together."

At luncheon his mind was absent, and he ate but little, and I ate less than he. It was going to be very hard for me to meet Gretchen.

* * * * * * *

The chancellor waved his hand toward a chair. We were very good friends.

"What is it now?" he asked, smiling. "I dare not stir up the antagonists against the government to give you a story, and, aside from the antagonists, it is dull."

"I will find the story in the present instance," said I. And in the fewest words possible I laid before him the object of my visit.

"This is a very strange story," he said, making a pyramid of his fingers and contemplating the task with a careful air. "Are you not letting your imagination run away with you?"

"This is a very strange story," he said.

"Not for a moment. I ask you to attend the ball at the American ministry this evening, and if the likeness between the two women does not convince you the matter shall drop so far as I am concerned."

"Has Herr Wentworth any idea of the affair?"

"It is not possible. What would be his object in keeping it a secret?"

"Still it is a grave matter and without precedent. We must move carefully. You understand that there was no knowledge of another child, only rumor, and then it was believed to be a hallucination of the mother, whose mind was not very strong."

"Do you believe," I asked, "that two persons born of different parentage in different lands may resemble each other as these two do?"

"No. I shall let you know what stand I'll take when I have seen them together. And what will his majesty say?" he mused. "I'm afraid the matter will assume many complications. And I might add that you seem particularly interested."

A slight warmth came into my cheeks.

"Your excellency understands that a journalist always takes great interest in affairs of this sort," was my rejoinder.

"Yes, yes," pleasantly. "But this so called sister—has she not lived most of her life in America, your own country?"

"Your excellency," said I hoarsely, "whether she regains her own or not is immaterial to me from a personal standpoint."

"Well, one way or the other, I shall decide what to do tonight. But, mind you, there must be proofs. Though they may look enough alike to be two peas in a pod, that will give your friend nothing you claim for her. The fate of your princess rests in the hands of Herr Wentworth. Have the two met?"

"No, but during the short time they have been in the city they have been mistaken for each other. And why do you call her my princess?"

"She is not ours yet. It was a strange story, as I remember it. In those days we had our doubts, as we still have, of another child. By the way, who suggested the matter to you?"

I recounted my interview with the prince.

"Ah," said the chancellor, "so it was he? He is a greedy fellow and careful. I can readily understand his object. He wants all or nothing. I shall help you all I can," he concluded as I reached for my hat.

"I ask nothing more," I replied. And then I passed from the cabinet into the crowded anteroom. It was filled with diplomats and soldiers, each waiting for an audience. They eyed me curiously and perhaps enviously as I made my way to the street. "Yes, indeed, what will the king say?" I mused on the way back to my rooms. What could he say?

That night Pembroke and I arrived at the ministry a little after 10. I was in a state of extreme nervousness.

"I'm in a regular funk," said Pembroke. "Supposing your princess does not come?"

"It is written that she will come."

"Well, I'm glad that I looked you up in London. I would not have missed this adventure."

We found Phyllis in a nook under the grand staircase. I gave a slight exclamation as I saw her. I had never seen her looking so beautiful.

"Come and sit down," said she, making room for us. "I have had a curious adventure."

"Tell us all about it," said Pembroke.

"I have had the honor of being mistaken for a princess," triumphantly.

"Who could doubt it?" said I, with a glance I could not help, which made her lower her eyes.

"Moreover," she continued, this time looking at Pembroke, "the gentleman who committed the error was the Austrian embassador. What a compliment to take home!"

"And who was the princess?" I felt compelled to ask, though I knew perfectly well.

"The Princess Hildegarde. Do you recall the night in London," to me, "when the same thing occurred? I am very anxious to meet this princess who looks so like me."

"You will have that pleasure immediately after the opera," said I.

Pembroke's eyes said something to me then, and I rose.

"There is Mr. Wentworth. I wish to speak to him. Will you excuse me?"

"With pleasure!" laughed Pembroke.

I threaded my way through the gathering throng to the side of Mr. Wentworth.

"How d'y' do, Winthrop?" he said, taking me by the arm. "Come into the conservatory. I want you to see some of the finest orchids that ever came from South America. The girls are looking well tonight. I suppose you noticed?"

"Especially Phyllis." Our eyes met.

When we entered the conservatory, he suddenly forgot all about the orchids.

"Jack, I'm worried about her—Phyllis. You see, she is not my niece. There's a long story. This morning a gentleman visited my department. He was Prince Ernst of Wortumborg. He began by asking me if Phyllis was my niece. That started the business. He proceeded to prove to me, as far as possible, that Phyllis was a princess. I could not say that it was all nonsense, because I did not know. Some 20 years ago a strange thing happened. I occupied the same residence as today. It was near midnight, and snowing fiercely. I was looking over some documents, when the footman came in and announced the presence of a strange woman in the hall who demanded to see me. The woman was young and handsome, and in her arms she carried a child. Would I, for humanity's sake, give a roof to the child till the morrow? The woman said that she was looking for her relatives, but as yet had not found them, and that the night was too cold for the child to be carried around. She was a nurse. The child was not hers, but belonged to a wealthy family of the south, who were to have arrived that day, but had not.

"The thing seemed so irregular that I at once consented, thinking to scan the papers the next day for an account of a lost or stolen child. She also carried a box which contained, she said, the child's identity. Now, as I am a living man, there was nothing in that box to show who the child was—nothing but clothes; not a jewel or a trinket. I looked through the papers in vain. And the woman never appeared again. Much against my will I was forced to keep the child. I am glad I did, for I have grown to love her as one of my own. I had a married sister who lived in Carolina, so I felt secure in stating that Phyllis was her daughter, therefore my niece. And that is positively all I know. And here comes a fellow who says he knows who she is and, moreover, that she is a princess. What do you say to that?"

"What he said is true." [illegible] Without proofs [illegible] far away as ever. I [illegible] know."

"I [illegible] see the [illegible] If they [illegible] things take [illegible] of [illegible] Phyllis [illegible] Ethel. So, whatever [illegible] to be a p[illegible] with her [illegible] the way, Jack [illegible] some [illegible]."

"Not a whisper." [illegible] understand [illegible] to the ballroom. [illegible] two when they meet."

I left him in the [illegible]. As I was in the act of [illegible] which led to the ballroom I was stopped. It was the prince.

"Well," he said, smiling ironically, "the matter is easily [illegible]; definitely settled. Your friend may in truth be a princess, but there are no proofs. In the eyes of men they are sisters; in the eyes of the law they are total strangers. I shall not ask you to congratulate me upon my success. I shall now wed the Princess Hildegarde with a sense of security. Come, have you seen her yet? She does not know that you are here. It will be a surprise and a pleasure. As to that other matter, I shall send a gentleman around to your rooms in the morning to arrange the affair."

"If I loved you, I should follow you to the end of the world."

I shivered. I had forgotten that I had accepted a challenge.

"Take me to her," said I. "She will be happy indeed to see me, as you know." I laughed in his face. "How convenient it would be for both of us, her and me, should my ball travel to the proper place! Believe me, I shall be most happy to kill you. There are many things on the slate to wipe out."

"I see that you are a gentleman of spirit," said he, smoothing the scowl from his brow. "Ah, there she stands. Look well, my friend; look at her well. This is probably the last night you will see her save as my wife."

The sight of that dear [illegible] the nerves from me and led me to [illegible]. Even in the momentary glance I detected a melancholy cast to her features. She was surrounded by several men who wore various decorations.

"Your highness," said the prince, mockery predominating in his tones, "permit me to present to you an old friend."

Was it because her soul [illegible] became conscious of my presence and nerved her for the ordeal that she turned and smiled on me? The prince appeared for a moment crestfallen. Perhaps the scene lacked a denouement. Oh, I was sure that implacable hate burned under that smile of his, just as I knew that beneath the rise and fall of Gretchen's bosom the steady fire of immutable love burned, burned as it burned in my own heart.

"Ah, here you are!" said a voice behind me, giving me an unexplainable start. "I have been looking high and low for you. You have forgotten this dance."

It was Phyllis.

And then a sudden hush fell upon the circle. The two women stood face to face, looking with strange wonder into each other's eyes.

CHAPTER XIX.

Phyllis and I were sitting in one of the numerous cozy corners. I had danced badly and out of time. The music and the babel of tongues had become murmurous and indistinct.

"And so that is the Princess Hildegarde?" she said after a spell.

"Yes; she is your double. Is she not beautiful?"

"Is that a left handed compliment to me?" Phyllis was smiling, but she was colorless.

"What do you think of her?" suppressing the eagerness in my voice.

"She is to be envied," softly.

And I grew puzzled.

"Jack, for a man who has associated with the first diplomatists of the world, who has learned to read the world as another might read a book, you are surprisingly unadept in the art of dissimulation."

"That is a very long sentence," said I in order to gain time enough to fathom what she meant. I could not. So I said, "What do you mean?"

"Your whole face was saying to the princess, 'I love you!' A glance told

DRAINAGE.

Two years ago the people of this section were sorely disappointed in the failure of their representatives to secure much needed state drainage appropriations, and are gratified to note that there are good prospects for favorable action by the legislature now in session. An appropriation of $100,000 to be expended on the drainage of swamp lands and reclaiming shallow lakes will be asked in the bill to be introduced today by Hon. O. H. Myron, of Ada, who represents the senatorial district composed of Red Lake, Norman and Beltrami counties. Albert Berg, of Roseau county, has introduced the same bill in the house. The benefits to be derived from it, as urged by its advocates, are not confined to any one portion of the state. The money asked is considered in the light of an investment by the state for the purpose of making waste lands productive of taxes, and it is expected that the bill will pass without serious opposition.

The bill will provide for the distribution of the appropriation by a commission to consist of the governor, the secretary of state, the state auditor, and possibly a drainage expert. Applications for apportionment under the appropriation are to be made by the various county boards to the commission. The commission is to investigate or cause to be investigated the needs of the counties represented by its applicants and make awards proportioned upon the relative needs of other counties. The money awarded is to be expended by the several counties within their own borders and under the supervision of the local officials. In the northern part of the state there are large tracts of land, the title to which is vested in the state and private individuals, that are absolutely waste and unproductive of taxes. This is especially true in Beltrami, Red Lake, Roseau and Kandiyohi counties. In Red Lake county a tract known as the Lost River contains thousands of acres of which the top soil, varying from one to five or six feet in depth, is a mere shell over an immense body of water. The promoters of this scheme claim this land may be reclaimed at an expenditure of not to exceed $4,000 or $5,000. The value of the reclaimed tract would, it is claimed, at once compensate the state for the entire amount of the appropriation asked.

Nicaragua Canal legislation is practically dead for this session. There isn't one chance in a possible one hundred that the Senate will take up and pass the Canal bill at this session. Non-action was made probable when the caucus of republican Senators decided not to take up the Canal bill until the British government decided what would be done with the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and well nigh certain by the death of Queen Victoria, which must result in delaying action by the British government on the treaty, as the British ministry is likely to be too busy with domestic affairs for some time to come to give any consideration to the treaty. The Panama Canal lobbyists are as gleeful over the hanging up of Nicaragua Canal legislation as though it had been done entirely by them.

The Senate restored the Ship Subsidy bill to its old place as the unfinished business without a division, but the doubt of its ever reaching a vote is still strong.

While our Congress has neglected making provision even for starting a Pacific cable, notwithstanding the earnest recommendation of the President and the Secretary of War, the State Department has a communication from the U. S. Consul-General at Melbourne, Australia, announcing that the Postmaster General of Victoria had closed a contract for a Pacific cable from Australia to Vancouver, British Columbia, at a total cost of $9,728,133.

There is little question that the two new congressional districts to be carved out of the Sixth and Seventh districts will be Republican. The Republicans have a majority in the legislature and will, without question, arrange the new districts in such a manner as to make them surely Republican. The matter is now in the hands of a sub committee of the general apportionment committee and a report is expected within a short time. Senator O. H. Myron, of Ada, is credited with desiring congressional honors under the new arrangement.

The appointment of Maj. E. D. Libbey to the office of adjutant general gives Ramsey county the three best offices under the governor. E. H. Dearth is insurance commissioner, and F. C. Schiffman is oil inspector and the appointment of Maj. Libby fixes things so that Ramsey gets the best offices. The work of half a dozen politicians who engineered the nomination of Van Sant is responsible for the big windfall of plums. Gov. Van Sant is remembering his friends, and this is the only proper thing to do. Many a promising political career has been cut short by failure to do this. These appointments must go to someone, and why not to those to whom the governor owes a political debt. Gov. Van Sant is making new friends by standing by his old friends.

It is the plain duty of every farmer within the radius of three to four miles of the creamery located in this city to come into line and help to build it up. To do this is a very simple matter—merely bring in the milk regularly every day, and do away with the home butter making. There is no valid excuse, whatsoever, for not doing this, except the lack of sufficient milk, but any farmer with four or five cows can not offer this as reason for with holding patronage. The Gazette asks every farmer who reads this to look into the creamery matter, and we are satisfied unprejudiced investigation will convince every one that it is to his best interests to put aside the churn at home, get into the march of progress, and build up this creamery. The receipts for butter fat will come in regularly every month, the skim milk will be left for stock-raising, there will be more by half realized from the cows, and the district tributary will grow in wealth. Every farmer who with holds his support from the creamery is a drone and a drawback to this section, and there is no mistake about it.

There seems to be considerable trouble in finding a father for the bill which has been proposed to raise the salaries of some of the state officers. None of the legislators seem anxious to go on record as favoring the increase of state expenses, and the search for the father of the bill has so far been without avail. There are a number of the members of the legislature who express a willingness to vote for the measure as soon as presented, but unless some one can be found to father the measure it may never be introduced.

Band Concert.

The Crookston Band will, on Tuesday evening, February 8 give a concert in the Opera House. They will also be accompanied by the GleeClub, who will add materially to the entertainment. After the concert a dance will be given, music to be furnished by the Crookston Orchestra.

The band is a very capable one and no doubt will put up a fine concert.

High School Items

Fred Richards, Delia Toupin and Bessie Hunt.

The J. C. C. held a meeting Wednesday.

We have State High School Board examinations this week.

Well, we are ahead of the Adrian High School. We have about a dozen new calendars.

Miss Eva Marchildon returned to school after an absence of a week, on account of illness.

The High School pupils had some very humerous debates on the English-Boer War this week, and a few nick names are the result.

In experimenting with sodium Wednesday in Chemistry the hydrogen, being set free, was ignited by a spark from the sodium and an explosion resulted, but fortunately nothing serious happened though some of the nervous members of the class made more of it than they should have, considering that they knew that an explosion was to occur.

Maud Findeisen entertained the Freshman Class at her home on Wednesday evening. The evening was spent in playing games. The prize was won by Verne Healy. It is reported that four of the number present had the whooping cough and one had neuralgia in the face. We think it was very unfortunate that a physician was not present. A fine repast was served after which all departed, reporting a good time.

The Minerva program committee reported last Friday. The following program will be rendered Friday, February 1:

I. Song by school, "I am a Forester Free and Bold."

II. Recitation, Dora Marchand

III. Original Story, Henrietta Hennemuth.

IV. Song, Pauline Neiland and Scott Hall.

V. Debate, "Should Voting be Compulsory." Anton Schusser and Lulu Fletcher will have the affirmative side and Dan Johnson and Beata Hage the negative.

VI. Reading, Eddie Paul.

VII. Song, Marjory Rodgers, Lillian Belair and Grace Tousley.

There is going to be a fight to place the oil inspectorship on a salary basis. A resolution has been introduced in the house requiring the inspector to make to the legislature a statement of the fees received and the disbursements of the office during the past two years, and on this a bill will be framed placing the office on a salary basis. It is currently reported that the office pays an enormous sum, and naturally the political machine will fight the proposal to take the fees away, but from the present outlook this fight will be without avail.

A Sad Lesson.

A sad accident resulted this afternoon on the corner of Ash street and Houston Avenue which wiped out the young life of a seven year old son of Street Commissioner Frank Jerome, almost instantly. From eye witnesses the Journal reporter learned the following particulars of the sad affair:

Teamsters who are hauling ice from a point on the river below where the accident occurred, were coming up town with loaded sleighs, and as they approached Houston Avenue several boys, among them young Jerome, ran toward the team in an effort to catch bobs. Apparently the little fellow, who is now cold in death as a result, got onto the front runner, but lost his hold and in falling got under the rear runner, which passed over his chest crushing two ribs just over the heart.

The injured boy was taken to a nearby house and medical aid summoned, but his injuries proved fatal, and he breathed his last without gaining consciousness.—Crookston Journal.

Rev. Val Kern, of Polk Centre, was in the city Monday on his return from Dugdale, where he had conducted services for the German Lutheran congregation the day previous. Rev. O. Tessier, of Terrebonne, made a business visit to the city Tuesday. He has recently served notice on the city authorities here, of a claim for damages in behalf of his client. Judge of Probate Knight on Monday sent the 7-year-old son of Julius Berg to the Orphan's Home at St. Paul, where he will be cared for. It will be remembered the boy's mother was committed to the asylum at Fergus Falls last fall, and died several days after. A representative of the Home will come here for the lad, who is said to be particularly bright and attractive, and he is assured of a good home in the future.

If ever there were a time when we needed to think of what we can have without money, it is now. We think so much about money. We talk so much about money. We say we can do nothing without money. That is not so. We can be saints without money; we can have peace of conscience, peace with God, joy in God, we can have heaven without money.—Margaret Bottome in the February Ladies' Home Journal.

Friday was Bobby Burns' day, and the most noteworthy celebration of the event in this section of the Northwest by the sons and daughters of Scotland was at Grand Forks, where an elaborate program was rendered by the Burns society. Dr. N. M. Watson of this city presided as toastmaster, and judging from the manner in which our Grand Forks exchanges speak of the event, he did himself proud. Red Lake Falls is herself proud of the Mayor who can so creditably represent her abroad.

Stephen Quesnell was in from Terrebonne Thursday last and left the subscription price of The Gazette in advance payment, as usual. Mr. Quesnell has been a resident of Terrebonne for twenty years. He owns one of the best stock farms in Red Lake county, and is pushing the dairy feature. The past year he had twenty milch cows, that netted him, by actual accounting, $31 apiece, not counting the calves. He has his own separator and ships his butter to a regular customer in Duluth, averaging 20 cents a pound the year around. Before coming to this section he was a pilot on a passenger and freight line of steamers, running between Montreal and Chicago, and he was a witness of the great Chicago fire.

GIRL SCARED TO DEATH.

Practical Jokers Have Fatal Fun with a Manufactured Skeleton.

The authorities of Allegany county are looking for persons who manufactured a skeleton out of bones of domestic animals, which frightened Mary Oldfield, of Karrdale, near Rochester, N. Y., to death the other night. Miss Oldfield, accompanied by two friends, was returning from a Halloween party, where they had listened to grewsome stories until their hair stood on end.

When about to enter the woods a rattling of bones was heard overhead and looking up the trio were overcome with horror to see a skeleton of gigantic proportions sweeping down on them from above. With a cry of terror Mary dropped in her tracks. A searching party found a wire leading from the ground to a tree top to which the skeleton was attached by a pulley.

Pointed Picturesqueness.

A Missouri editor thinks it quite sad to see a young husband supporting a sealskin wife on a muskrat salary. For pointed picturesqueness of expression, says the Denver Post, the Missouri rural editor takes the corn pone.

Hope to Get Some of It.

There are good reasons for believing, says the Chicago Times-Herald, that the lawyers all over our broad land are glad the man who stole $700,000 was caught and will be tried.

EDWARD VII REIGNS

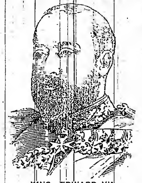
ENGLAND'S NEW KING TAKES THE OATH OF OFFICE.

Ceremonies in Connection With the Official Proclamation Carried Out as in Olden Times—Funeral of the Late Queen Will Be Military in Character and Will Occur on Feb. 2.

London, Jan. 24.—An extraordinary issue of The Gazette, which appears with black borders, announces the death of Queen Victoria, adding:

"The event has caused one universal feeling of regret and sorrow to her late majesty's faithful subjects, to whom she was endeared by the deep interest in their welfare which she invariably manifested, as well as by many signal virtues which marked and adorned her character."

Then follows the proclamation of Edward VII, the acknowledgment of allegiance by the privy council and the king's speech at his accession.



KING EDWARD VII.

After giving a list of those who attended the council The Gazette announces that the king subscribed the oath relating to the security of the Church of Scotland. It concludes with the king's formal proclamation ordering all officers and persons in authority throughout his dominions to continue to exercise their offices during the royal pleasure and exhorting his subjects to aid and assist such officers in the performance and execution of their duties.

LIKE OLDEN TIMES.

Ancient Precedent Followed in Proclaiming the New King.

London, Jan. 26.—London was given a glimpse of medaeval times during the day. The quaint ceremonies with which King Edward VII was proclaimed at various points of the metropolis exactly followed ancient precedents. The officials purposely arranged the function an hour ahead of the published announcement and the inhabitants when they awoke were surprised to find the entire way between St. James palace and the city lined with troops. About 10,000 soldiers, Life Guards, Horse Guards, Foot Guards and other cavalry and infantry regiments, had been brought from Aldershot and London barracks after midnight. All the officers had crepe on their arms and the drums and brass instruments were shrouded with crepe. The troops, in themselves, made an imposing spectacle, but they were entirely eclipsed by the strange spectacle presented by the officials of the college of arms.

The ceremony began at St. James palace where, at 9 o'clock, Edward VII was proclaimed king of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and emperor of India. The proclamation was read by William Henry Weldon, king-at-arms since 1894 and formerly Windsor herald.

DEATH OF VICTORIA.

Nearly All Her Descendants Gathered at Her Bedside.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Jan. 23.—Queen Victoria is dead and Edward VII reigns.

The greatest event in the memory of this generation, the most stupendous change in existing conditions that could possibly be imagined has taken place quietly, almost gently, upon the anniversary of the death of Queen Victoria's father, the Duke of Kent.

The end of this career, never equalled by any woman in the world's history, came in a simply furnished room in Osborne House. This most respected of all women, living or dead, lay in a great 4-posted bed and made a shrunken atom whose aged face and figure were a cruel mockery of the fair girl who in 1837 began to rule over England.

Around her were gathered almost every descendant of her line. In scarcely audible words the white-haired Bishop of Winchester prayed beside her as he had often prayed with his sovereign, for he was her chaplain at Windsor. With bowed heads the royal watchers listened to

The Bishop's Ceaseless Prayer.

Six o'clock passed. The bishop continued his intercession. The women of this royal family sobbed faintly and the men shuffled uneasily.

At exactly half past six Sir James Reid held up his hand and the people in the room knew that England had lost her queen. The bishop pronounced the benediction. The queen passed away quite peacefully.

The Prince of Wales was very much affected when the doctors at last informed him that his mother had breathed her last. Emperor William, himself deeply affected, did his best to minister comfort to his sorrow-stricken uncle, whose new dignity he was the first to acknowledge.

At the lodge gates the watchers waited nervously. Suddenly along the driveway came a horseman, who shouted "The queen is dead" as he dashed through the crowd. Down the hillside the watchers shouted the fateful bulletin from one to another. Soon the whole country knew there was a new king in Great Britain. Every one was mourning the death of the queen, but they did not hesitate to stop and drink the health of the new king.

THE QUEEN'S FUNERAL.

Decided the Burial Will Take Place Feb. 2.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Jan. [illegible].—It has been decided that the funeral of the queen will take place at Windsor castle, Feb. 2. The body of the late queen will be removed from Osborne House Feb. 1. It was the expressed desire of the queen that the funeral should be military in character. Several officials arrived from Windsor during the morning, bringing the state regalia. It was carried in a [illegible]. A naval salute of 21 guns was fired here at noon in honor of King Edward VII.

GAINS MESABA RANGE MINE.

American Steel and Wire Acquires Chisholm Company's Lease.

Duluth, Jan. 25.—The American Steel and Wire company has secured the Chisholm iron company's lease to its lands on the Mesaba range. By the terms of the lease the Steel and Wire company pays the Chisholm company a bonus of $75,000 and 10 per cent annual royalty, and in addition pays to the fee owners 25 per cent. annual royalty. The terms call for a minimum annual production of 100,000 tons. The property is a valuable one, having shown up more than 7,000,000 tons of ore, mostly high grade Bessemer. The Steel and Wire company now controls four Mesaba range mines.

WORK ON NEW ROAD.

Ontario and Rainy River Line Is Progressing.

Duluth, Jan. 28.—About 500,000 ties and 300,000,000 feet of timber and piling will be required along the line of the Ontario and Rainy River road, now under way, and men are in the woods cutting this and getting the right of way cleared. There are now, or will be in a few weeks, about 4,000 along the line between the Atikokan and Rainy Lake, 150 miles. Grading and logging camps are being built every 10 miles and a very large force is getting out bridge timber. The road is to be finished in time to haul out the wheat crop of the present year, and there are 225 miles yet to build.

Charged With the Midway Fire.

St. Paul, Jan. 27.—Seagred Olsen, alias Seagred Marks, is at central police station arrested on a state complaint sworn out by Chief O'Connor charging him and two confederates with arson in the burning of Arthur V. Hinman's slaughterhouse at Midway. This was the fire that caused the death of four members of St. Paul's fire department last fall.

Coffee and Spice Mill Burns.

St. Paul, Jan. 27.—The coffee and spice mill of H. B. Strait & Co., 194 East Third street, in the wholesale district, between Sibley and Jackson, was visited by a fire shortly before midnight that for a while promised to wipe the entire block out of existence. The fire was finally got under control. The property damage is about $50,000.

Minnesota Town Scorched.

Madison, Minn., Jan. 26.—Fire broke out in the Opset building, occupied by F. W. Anderson with a stock of drugs and confectionery. It spread rapidly to the Husebo building on the south and the Havreberg and Carlson buildings on the north, both of which were destroyed. The total loss is $15,000.

HAD A CHEST OF GOLD

Iowa Man Dies in Want With $4,000 Within His Reach.

Grinnell, Ia., Jan. 24.—John Knox, an eccentric character of Oskaloosa, died in absolute want while within reach of his hand was a chest containing $4,000 in gold coin. Knox has lived in Oskaloosa for about 30 years during which time he has lived the life of a recluse. He repulsed all efforts to bring him in closer touch with the people about him. It was always supposed that he was in abject poverty, but he always fiercely resisted all offers of assistance. During his last illness he would not admit anyone to his presence and would have died all alone and unattended had not the neighbors forced themselves to his bedside.

After death, which occurred amidst the meanest surroundings, a search among his effects revealed the presence of a strong chest containing $4,000 in gold coin.

Judge R. N. Austin Dead.

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 27.—Judge R. N. Austin for half a century a resident in this city, died during the evening, aged 79 years. Judge Austin was well-known in the law profession throughout the state. He was city attorney in 1890 and later judge of the superior court and court commissioner.

North Dakotan at Copenhagen.

Copenhagen, Jan. 23.—J. A. Johnson, mayor of Fargo, N. D., is here as the guest of L. S. Swenson, the United States minister. He is working up the project of emigration to the Northwest. Mr. Johnson will, later, go to Sweden, Norway and Finland.

A BOOM IN LAND BUSINESS.

Little did the early pioneer, standing on the banks of the Black River twenty years ago, imagine the progress this section would make. At that time a dispute was in progress between the government and the railroad as to the ownership of nearly every other section of land ten miles on each side of the track. Along the banks of the river, and spreading over the adjacent lands, were groves of poplar and oak, and the early settlers occupied the winter time by helping themselves to wood from the unsettled and unclaimed lands, until nothing but stumps remained of the groves, and the land seemed worthless. The railroad company finally established title to the lands and held them for sale at constantly advancing prices. Many settled on the company's property, buying forty acres and farmed on the rest free, raising large crops on the appropriated lands. They felt little risk in plowing those fields and seeding them in the spring. No one interfered with them. Now, something has stimulated business, when men with capital from Iowa and elsewhere have gotten interested in this land and are steadily making deals and investing. In fact, the land hereabouts has gotten to be in such demand that it is bought up often without inspection, bringing nine and ten dollars per acre. The present boom was not expected, which is demonstrated by the fact many bought forty acres and put up buildings and made improvements on adjacent tracts that belong to the railroad company.

To those who have seen the development of this section from the early days, this awakening as to the real value of our land is gratifying. The vacant government lands are fast disappearing and the pressure from the crowded districts of the east and middle west, where farm lands are selling at fifty and sixty dollars per acre, is crowding the homeseeker this way. Most of these new comers are rich farmers who have disposed of their lands in the older sections and come here to buy at prices that they consider give them a sure thing in the future. They will bring with them up-to-date ideas of farming, and will not only prosper themselves, but will be the means of helping along the prosperity of the whole tributary country.

His Life was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with Typhoid Fever that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I could not even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave me great relief. I continued to use, and am now well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all Throat and Lung Troubles. Regular sizes 50 cents and $1.00. Trial bottles free at W. A. AMERICA REWARDS FIVE TARS

Recognizes the Heroism of British Sailors Who Rescued Yankee Crew.

The United States government, through the Liverpool consulate, has substantially rewarded five seamen of the Dominion liner Commonwealth for their gallant services in rescuing the crew of the American schooner Leading Breeze, which was wrecked in a hurricane off Portland, Me., October 16. The Leading Breeze was bound from Boston, Mass., with a cargo of salt for Eastport, Me., and was in a waterlogged and sinking condition when sighted by the Commonwealth.

The rescue was effected with great difficulty in a heavy sea. The schooner's crew was thoroughly exhausted and the men lost everything they possessed. When they landed at Liverpool they were supplied with all they needed at the American consulate.

Capt. McCauley, who skillfully handled the Commonwealth while the rescue was being attempted, and the second officer, Mathias, who was in command of the boat's crew, will also be rewarded.

"I may not go at all to the United States," he said, "certainly not for several months. There has been too much talk about my cousin.

"Frenchmen of standing will be slow in future to marry American heiresses. What is the good of their being heiresses if the whole family and a guardian to boot must be consulted before one can touch a cent of one's wife's money?

"The international marriage market has received a shock from which it will be slow to recover."

DISPUTE OVER UNIFORMS.

Controversy Between Gen. Miles and the Quartermasters of the Army.

There is a controversy going on at the war department over the adoption of uniforms for the enlisted men. Some time ago Gen. Miles, commanding the army, submitted recommendations affecting the apparel of the soldiers. Among other things he suggested the campaign hat, with broad brim, one side of which was turned up and fastened with a cockade. The effect was somewhat striking, and the design was adopted from a British design. The army quartermasters resented the interference with their work by Gen. Miles. They have shelved the suggestions from Gen. Miles, and there is a good deal of ill feeling on the subject.

Too Large a Bite.

Manchuria being about 800 miles one way and 500 the other, it is no wonder the Russian bear denies having swallowed it at the first gulp. At least two bites at a cherry of that magnitude are to be looked for, says the New York Tribune, and perhaps several more. But there is little doubt that the robust animal will worry it all down sooner or later.

THE PERPLEXING LEONIDES.

Astronomers Prepare to Photograph Heavenly Display That May Not Appear.

Yale astronomers are preparing to photograph what Leonides appear in the heavens this fall. Last year at this time the most extensive preparations were made to photograph the meteoric display, but the cloudy skies and the fact that but few leonids appeared threw the astronomers into a state of great perplexity. Since then the reason for the non-appearance of the meteorites has not been discovered. Dr. Frederick L. Chase, of the Yale observatory, says:

"There is just as much reason to expect the leonids at this time as last year. Astronomers have not yet been able to discover why it is that with the usual regularity with which the leonids come every 33 years the shower last year failed to appear. There are two possible explanations of this. Since the last great shower in 1866 Jupiter has passed quite close to the portion of the orbit containing the meteors due in 1899, and has, according to calculations, so perturbed the path as to make them cross the line of the earth's orbit several hundred thousand miles inside the orbit—that is, nearer the sun—so that the earth may not have passed through the swarm. At the same time the stream will take but four or five hours in passing any way, and if it comes before the radiant is above the horizon it will not be seen at all.

"The second possible explanation is that there was a dearth of meteors in that portion of the swarm encountered by the earth in 1899, and there is no reason to-day to think that they are evenly distributed. It is possible, however, to believe that the portion of the stream due at the intersection of the earth's orbit this year, has not yet been perturbed by Jupiter in the same way as last year."

TO CONDUCT A DAIRY FARM.

Former Well-Known Newspaper Woman Buys Herd of Jerseys.

Mrs. Antoinette Van Hoesen Wakeman, formerly a well-known newspaper woman in Chicago, has put a herd of grade Jersey and Jersey-Holstein cows on her farm, near Hastings, Minn., and made the first shipment of milk to the Crescent Creamery company, of St. Paul.

Mrs. Wakeman believes that Hastings is admirably situated to become a point for the shipping of milk to the Twin Cities. She proposes to devote her place, which is less than a mile from the courthouse, exclusively to dairy products and fruit, and has built a barn, and proposes to have her herd and milk cared for on the lines indicated by Prof. T. L. Hacker, of the agricultural experiment station of the state university. Mrs. Wakeman has arranged to ship from 20 to 30 gallons of milk daily.

Although this is a somewhat unusual innovation for a woman in this part of the country, "personally conducted" farms are a profitable fad of eastern women. Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder, whose husband is the editor of the Century, has a farm of 200 acres, where she lives nine months out of every year, and makes most profitable. Abram Hewitt's daughters are also enthusiastic and successful scientific farmers, and many other well-known women are devoting themselves to similar agricultural undertakings.

Lightning Rod Miles in Length.

Bavaria has a most curious claim to notoriety, which is that it possesses the longest lightning conductor in the world. It rises some yards above the top of the meteorological station on the Zugspitze, the highest point in the German empire, and runs down the side of the mountain to the bottom of Hullenthal, where there is running water all the year round. The length of the rod is five and one-half kilometers—nearly three and a half miles.

Another high-class Chinese villain has committed suicide by swallowing gold leaf, says the Chicago Tribune. Foiled again!

Neuralgia's Pangs

Are the warning cries from overworked, worried, weak, hungry and exhausted nerves—nerves that have been abused and neglected until outraged nature could stand the strain no longer without a protest. Every piercing, cutting, tearing, burning, pressing pain of this dreadful disease is a call for help. Why not heed this call while relief is within your reach? Now is the time to begin; and the best of all remedies to use is

'For years I suffered with neuralgia, which especially affected my eyes; and a plain, unvarnished story of my sufferings would read like exaggeration. Words are powerless to express the pain I endured. Three years ago I tried a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine, and it helped me so much that I bought a dozen more. Before they were gone the neuralgia was completely cured, and has never bothered me since."

Persons who suffer from indigestion cannot expect to live long, because they cannot eat the food required to nourish the body and the products of the undigested foods they do eat poison the blood. It is important to cure indigestion as soon as possible, and the best method of doing this is to use the preparation known as Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat and restores all the digestive organs to perfect health. W. A. Schreiter.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

LEWIS HALE, BRAKEMAN ON ST. HILAIRE TRAIN KILLED MONDAY.

CAR LEFT THE RAILS AND TUMBLED DOWN A STEEP EMBANKMENT.

Death while in the discharge of his duty came to Lewis Hale of this city at noon today in the yards of the Great Northern at Thief River Falls.

Deceased was a brakeman on the train on that line of which Conductor Lockman is in charge. The crew arrived there on time and proceeded to do the switching preparatory to the return trip, before eating dinner.

A half dozen empty box cars were being backed in on the spur leading down to the Lumber Company's mills when the rails spread, and the head car, upon which Hale and J. K. Bardon, the other brakeman, were riding, left the rails. Both men jumped, Bardon being fortunate enough to spring in the opposite direction from that in which the cars were leaning.

Hale was not so fortunate, however. He attempted to run back over the cars, but in jumping to the next one behind that on which the men stood he lost his footing and fell to the ground.

The cars toppled over and fell down the embankment, and Hale was caught under them, his head being completely severed from his body.

As soon as possible jackscrews were brought and the car raised sufficiently to enable willing hands to remove the body, which was mangled almost out of resemblance to a human being.

Bardon sustained a severely sprained ankle in jumping to the frozen ground, and also broke one of the bones in his foot. He was cared for and will be brought down on tonight's train. Hale's remains will be prepared for burial at Thief River and will not be brought to the city until tomorrow night.

The dead man has been in the employ of the road several years, and has been on the Thief River run nearly two years. He lived on the corner of Fourth street and Broadway, and leaves a widow and three children.

The task of breaking the terrible news to the wife of the deceased was performed by Mrs. S. H. Withey. The poor woman was prostrated when the full force of her great loss came home to her heart, and she is inconsolable, although kind friends are doing all possible for her.

The burden of her grief must be borne alone, and time alone can modify the harshness of the blow. Human sympathy is poor and weak in the presence of such a sorrow.

Louis Hale was quiet, unassuming, always prompt and attentive to business. He was well liked by all the railroad men, and each one feels a personal loss in his untimely death. —Crookston Times, Feb. 4.

VETERAN'S COATS.

THE HOUSE SAYS THEY NEED THEM AND PROPOSES TO BUY THE COATS.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 6.—That the veterans at the soldiers' home are suffering for the lack of coats which the board of trustees has not funds to buy them with, was brought to the attention of the house in a resolution by J. A. Peterson, of Hennepin, which was passed after some objection by Mr. Jacobson, who wanted it referred to the committee on soldier's home. Some members made impassioned appeals for the veterans, and as it is now and not in June that the coats are needed it was decided not to defer action.

Among the new bills introduced this week are to provide for a poll tax on dogs, an increase in the bounty to be paid for female wolves, to abolish days of grace and for a constitutional amendment making possible the investment of the state school fund in bonds of school districts.

Glanders.

It was reported that glanders existed among the horses of Leon Huot and Xavier Clement, of Polk Centre, and the board of Supervisors proceeded to investigate. They found the horses were affected with some disease and immediately quarantined the places and notified the State Board of Health, to send a man to investigate.

In this connection it is of interest to note that an effort is being made to protect the farmers and others by having the state pay for animals killed by order of health officers. Representative Thos. Farson, of Watonwan county has introduced into the house a bill for the protection of owners of animals wrongfully killed under the workings of the law for the prevention of the spread of contagious diseases among domestic animals.

The bill provides that the owners of animals killed by order of health officers may, within twenty-four hours after an animal is slaughtered, file a protest and demand a post slaughter investigation, to be conducted by three experts. If it be found that the animal was not suffering from the alleged contagious disease, the appraised value of the animal shall be paid to the owner, one-fifth from the county treasury and four-fifths from the state's strong box.

FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

DOCTORS OF THE STATE IN FAVOR OF THE SANITARIUM.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 6.—The bill recently introduced in the legislature for the establishment of a state sanitarium for the care of curable consumptives is meeting with much favor among the physicians of the state. It is more than probable that it will be passed. The idea is to erect a building somewhere in the pine woods of Northern Minnesota capable of accommodating 150 patients. These patients are to pay for their own support while in the institution, little of the expense falling on the state. In case the patients are unable to pay their own way the bill authorizes the commissioners in the counties in which they live to assume the expenses.

TREACHERY.

AN AMERICAN CONTRACTOR ABUSES CONFIDENCE OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

Manila, Feb. 7.—Several rich Spanish merchants and a prominent American contractor and owner of vessels have been arrested on charge of giving aid to the insurgents. Carmon, the American, had the confidence of army officials from whom he received many contracts.

RYDER HAS A SCHEME TO CHANGE THE FORM OF THE BALLOT.

St. Paul, Feb. 6.—Senator Ryder, of Polk, wants the form of the ballot changed. His ballot provides for the names of the nominees of each party shall be in separate columns, side by side, and provides for the president and only one of the presidential electors to be voted for.

NATIONISM.

THE SNASHING CRAZE HAS TAKEN HOLD IN A NEW SECTION.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

Chicago, Feb. 7.—The craze for lawlessness instituted by Mrs. Carrie Nation has spread to Chicago, and been adopted by a religious sect, followers of the Dowie Faith Cure. Half a dozen female desciples have adopted the Nation tactics, and crying out that drugs are the agents of the devil, are going about wrecking drug stores, armed with pitchforks, umbrellas, canes, etc. There have been no arrests.

A Growing Lodge.

The members of the Modern Brotherhood of America enjoyed themselves immensely Monday evening, Feb. 4th, initiating a class of twenty five ladies and gentlemen.

Business was suspended immediately after the initiation, and the members and candidates enjoyed progressive pedro until 11:30, when Edmund Bray was declared winner of the gentlemen's head prize, an artistic solid gold medal designed especially for the occasion. Four Ladies cut for the ladies' head prize, which was a unique and beautiful silver toothpick holder, suitably engraved. It was finally awarded to Mrs. Dolphis Patnode.

The amusement over the booby prizes ran high. The gentlemen's a highly colored picture book, was won by Narcisse Benoit, and the ladies', a clown gorgeously dressed was awarded Mrs. Peter Beautrow.

After the members had discussed the merits of an elaborate lunch, the floor was quickly cleaned and dancing was indulged in. When the members finally departed for their homes, they voted the evening one of the most pleasant they had ever spent. We think it will be repeated in the near future as we understand another class of candidates is being formed.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

It is expected the board will parole James Southall, whose wife is alleged to have gone insane over failure to obtain his pardon.

Arms and The Woman

at all. I was glad for your sake that no other woman saw you at that moment. But I suppose it would not have mattered to you."

"Not if all the world had seen the look," moodily.

"Poor Jack, you are very unlucky!" Her voice was full of pity. "I feel so sorry for you, it is all so impossible. And she loves you too."

"How do you know?"

"I looked at her while she was looking at you."

"You have wonderful eyes."

"So I have been told. I wonder why she gave you that withered and worm eaten rose?"

"A whim," I said, staring at the rug. I wondered how she came to surmise that it was Gretchen's rose? Intuition perhaps.

"Do you love her well enough," asked Phyllis, plucking the lace on her fan, "to sacrifice all the world for her; to give up all your own happiness that she might become happy?"

"She never can be happy without me if she loves me as I believe," I admit that this was a selfish thought in [illegible].

"Then why is it impossible, your love and hers? If her love for you is as great as you say it is, what is a king, a prince or a principality to her?"

"It is none of those. It is because she has given her word, the word of a princess. What would you do in her place?" suddenly.

"I?" Phyllis leaned back among the cushions, her eyes half closed and a smile on her lips. "I am afraid that if I loved you I should follow you to the end of the world. Honor is a fine thing, but in her case it is an empty word. If she broke this word for you, who would be wronged? No one, since the prince covets only her dowry and the king desires only his will obeyed. Perhaps I do not understand what social obligation means to those people who are born in purple."

"Perhaps that is it. Phyllis, listen, and I will tell you a romance which has not yet been drawn to its end. Once upon a time—let me call it a fairy story," said I, drawing down a palm leaf as if to read the tale from its blades. "Once upon a time in a country far from ours there lived a prince and a princess. The prince was rather a bad fellow. His faith in his wife was not the best, and he made a vow that if ever children came he would make them as evil as himself. Not long after the good fairy brought two children to her godchild, the princess. Remembering the vow made by the prince, the good fairy carried away one of the children, and no one knew anything about it save the princess and the fairy. When the remaining child was 2 years old, the princess died. The child from then on grew like a wild flower. The prince did his best to spoil her, but the good fairy watched over her just as carefully as she watched over the child she had hidden away. By and by the wicked prince died. The child reached womanhood. The good fairy went away and left her. Perhaps she now gave her whole attention to the other." I let the palm leaf slip back and drew down a fresh one. "Phyllis, [illegible] with [illegible] still a [illegible] for all [illegible]. She was willing [illegible] commanded [illegible] what had the fairy done with the other child, the twin sister of this wild princess? Perhaps in this instance the good fairy died and left [illegible] to [illegible] by a [illegible] newspaper reporter. Now this fellow has fully ascertained that the good fairy had left the lost princess in the care of one of a forester. Having a wife and daughter of his own, he brought the princess up as his own, not knowing himself who she really was. She became wise, respected and beautiful in mind and form. Fate, who governs all fairy stories, first brought the newspaper reporter into the presence of the lost princess. She was a mere girl then and was selling lemonade in—at 25 cents a glass. She"—

"Jack," came in wondering tones, "for mercy's sake, what are you telling me?"

"Phyllis, can you not look back, perhaps as in a dream, to an old inn where soldiers and ministers in a hurry and confusion moved to and fro? No; I dare say you were too young. The Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia is your sister." I rose and bowed to her respectfully.

"My sister, the princess? I a princess? Jack," indignantly, "you are mocking me! It is not fair!"

"Phyllis, as sure as I stand before you all I have said is true. And now let me be the first to do homage to your serene highness," taking her hand despite her efforts to withdraw it and kissing it.

"It is unreal! Impossible! Absurd!" she cried.

"Let me repeat the words of the French philosopher who said, 'As nothing is impossible let us believe in the absurd,'" said I.

"And does she know—the Princess Hildegarde? My sister? How strange the word feels on my tongue."

"No; she does not know, but presently she will."

Then Phyllis asked in an altered tone, "And what is all this to you that you thrust this greatness upon me, a greatness, I assure you, for which I do not care?"

I regarded her vaguely. I saw a precipice at my feet. I could not tell her that in making her a princess I was making Gretchen free. I could not confess that my motive was purely a selfish one.

"It was a duty," said I evasively.

"And in what way will it concern the Princess Hildegarde's affairs—and yours?" She was rather merciless.

"Why should it concern any affair of mine?" I asked.

"You love her, and she loves you. May she not abdicate in my favor?"

"And if she should?" with an accent of impatience.

Phyllis grew silent. "Forgive me, Jack!" impulsively. "But all this is scarcely to be believed. And then you say there are no proofs."

"Not in the eyes of the law," I replied. "But nature has written it in your faces." I was wondering why she had not gone into raptures at the prospect of becoming a princess.

"It is a great honor," she said after some meditation, "and it is very kind of you. But I care as little for the title as I do for this rose." And she cast away one of Pembroke's roses. It boded ill for my cousin's cause.

The next person I saw was the chancellor.

"Well?" I interrogated.

"There can be no doubt," he said, "but"—with an expressive shrug.

"Life would run smoother if it had fewer 'buts' and 'ifs' and 'perhapses.' What you would say," said I, "is that there are no proofs. Certainly they must be somewhere."

"But to find them!" cried he.

"I shall make the effort. The pursuit is interesting."

The expression in his eyes told me that he had formed an opinion in regard to my part. "Ah, these journalists!" as he passed on.

Everything seemed so near and yet so far. Proofs? Where could they be found if Wentworth had them not? If only there had been a trinket, a kerchief even, with the Hohenphalia crest upon it! I shook my fists in despair. Gretchen was so far away, so far!

I went in search of her. She was still surrounded by men. The women were not as friendly toward her as they might have been. The prince was standing near. Seeing me approach, his teeth gleamed for an instant.

"Ah," said Gretchen, "here is Herr Winthrop, who is to take me in to supper."

It was cleverly done, I thought. Even the prince was of the same mind. He appreciated all these phases. As we left them and passed on toward the supper room I whispered:

"I love you!"

CHAPTER XX.

When I whispered those words, I expected a gentle pressure from Gretchen's fingers, which rested lightly on my arm. But there was no sign, and I grew troubled. The blue green eyes sparkled, and the white teeth shone between the red lips. Yet something was lacking.

"Let us go into the conservatory," she said. "It was merely a ruse of mine. I want no supper. I have much to say to you."

Somehow we selected by mutual accord a seat among the roses. There was a small fountain, and the waters sang in a harmonious music. It seemed too early for words, so we drew our thoughts from the marble and the water. As for me, I looked at, but did not see, the fountain. It was another scene. There was a garden in which the roses grew in beautiful disorder. There were a man and a woman in the garden. She was culling roses, while the man looked on with admiring eyes.

"Yes," said the princess, "all that was a pretty dream. Gretchen was a fairy, and now she has gone from your life and mine forever. My dear friend, it is a prosaic age we live in. Sometimes we forget and dream, but dreams are unreal. It is true that God designs us, but the world molds us and tacks on the finishing touches." She was smiling into my wonder-struck face. "We all have duties to perform while passing. Some of us are born with destinies mapped out by human hands. Some of us are free to make life what we will. I am of the first order, and you are of the second. It is as impossible to join the one with the other as it is to make diamonds out of charcoal and water. Between Gretchen and the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia there is as much difference as there is between—what simile shall I use, the possible and the impossible?"

"Gretchen," I began.

"Gretchen?" The princess laughed amusedly. "She is flown. I beg you not to waste a thought on her memory."

Things were going badly for me. I did not understand the mood. It brought to mind the woman poor Hillars had described to me in his rooms that night in London. I saw that I was losing something, so I made what I thought a bold stroke. I took from my pocket a withered rose. I turned it from one hand to the other.

"It appears that when Gretchen gave me this it was as an emblem of her love. Still I gave her all my heart."

"If that be the emblem of her love, herr, throw it away. It is not worth the keeping."

"And Gretchen sent me a letter once," I went on.

"Ah, what indiscretion!"

"It began with 'I love you' and ended with that sentence. I have worn the writing away with my kisses."

"How some men waste their energies!"

"Your highness," said I, putting the rose back into my pocket, "did Gretchen ever tell you how she fought a duel for me because her life was less to her than mine?"

The Princess Hildegarde's smile stiffened, and her eyes closed for the briefest instant.

"Ah, shall I ever forget that night!" said I. "I held her to my heart and kissed her on the lips. I was supremely happy. Your highness has never known what a thing of joy it is to kiss the one you love. It is one of those things which are denied to people who have their destinies mapped out by human hands."

The princess opened her fan and hid her lips.

"And do you know," I continued, "when Gretchen went away I had a wonderful dream?"

"A dream? What was it?" The fan was waving to and fro.

"I dreamed that a princess came in Gretchen's place, and she threw her arms around my neck and kissed me of her own free will!"

"And what did she say, herr?" Certainly the voice was growing more like Gretchen's.

I hesitated. To tell her what the dream princess had said would undo all I had thus far accomplished, which was too little.

"It will not interest your highness," said I.

"Tell me what she said. I command it!" And now I was sure that there was a falter in her voice.

"She said—she said that she loved me."

"Continue."

"And that as she was a princess and—and honor bound it could never be." I had to say it.

"That is it; that is it. It could never be. Gretchen is no more. The princess who you say came to you in a dream was then but a woman"—

"Aye, and such a woman!" I interrupted. "As God hears me I would give ten years of my life to hold her again in my arms, to kiss her lips, to hear her say that she loved me. But, pardon me, what were you going to say?"

"Your dream princess was but a woman. Ah, well, this is Tuesday! Thursday at noon she will wed the prince. It is written."

"The devil!" I let slip. I was at the stag again.

"Sir, you do him injustice."

"Who, the prince?" savagely.

"No, the—the devil!" She had fully recovered, and I had no weapon left.

"Gretchen, did you really ever love me?"

There was no answer.

"No; I did not believe you did. If you had loved me, what to you would have been a king, a prince, a principality? If you broke that promise, who would be wronged? Not the king, not the prince."

"No, I should not have wronged them, but," said the princess, rising, "I should have wronged my people, whom I have sworn to protect; I should have wronged my own sense of honor; I should have broken those ties which I have sworn to hold dear and precious as my life; I should have forsaken a sacred duty for something I was not sure of—a man's love!"

"Gretchen!"

"Am I cruel? Look!" Phyllis stood at the other end of the conservatory. "Does not there recur to you some other woman you have loved? You start. Come, was not your love for Gretchen pique? Who is she who thus mirrors my own likeness? Whoever she is she loves you. Let us return. I shall be missed." It was not the woman but the princess who spoke.

"You are breaking two hearts!" I cried, my voice full of disappointment, passion and anger.

"Two? Perhaps, but yours will not be counted."

"You are"—

"Pray do not lose your temper," idly. And she swept toward the entrance.

I had lost.

As the princess drew near to Phyllis the brown eyes of the one met the blue green eyes of the other. There was almost an exclamation on Phyllis' lips; there was almost a question on Gretchen's; both paled. Phyllis understood, but Gretchen did not, why the impulse to speak came. Then the brown eyes of Phyllis turned their penetrating gaze to my own eyes, which I was compelled to shift. I bowed, and the princess and I passed on.

By the grand staircase we ran into the prince. His face wore a dissatisfied air.

"I was looking for your highness," he said to Gretchen. "Your carriage is at the curb. Permit me to assist you. Ah, yes," in English, "it is Herr Winthrop! I regret that the interview of tomorrow will have to be postponed till Monday."

"Any time," said I, watching Gretchen, whose eyes widened, "will be agreeable to me."

Gretchen made as though to speak, but the prince anticipated her.

"It is merely a little discussion, your highness," he said, "which Herr Winthrop and I left unfinished earlier in the evening. Good night."

On the way to the cloakroom it kept running through my mind that I had lost. Thursday? She said Thursday was the day of her wedding. It would be an evil day for me.

Pembroke was in the cloakroom.

"Going?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Well, let us go together. Where shall it be, Egypt or the steppes of Siberia?"

"Home first," said I. "Then we shall decide."

"'One more unfortunate. Make no deep scrutiny!'" he quoted. "Jack, she wouldn't think of it, not for a moment. Perhaps I was a trifle too soon. Yes, she is a princess, indeed. As for me, I shall go back to elephants and tigers. It's safe."

"As for me, I shall go back to elephants and tigers. It's safe."

"'The Bridge of Sighs,'" said I. "Let us cross it for good and all."

"And let it now read 'Sighs Abridged.' What do you say to this proposition, the north, the bears and the wolves? I've a friend who owns a shooting box a few miles across the border. There's bears and gray wolves galore. Eh?"

"I must get back to work," said I, but half heartedly.

"To the devil with your work! Throw it over. You've got money. Your book is gaining you fame. What's a hundred dollars a week to you and jumping from one end of the continent to the other with only an hour's notice?"

"I'll sleep on it."

"Good. I'll go to bed now, and you can have the hearth and the tobacco to yourself."

"Good night," said I.

Yes, I wanted to be alone. But I did not smoke. I sat and stared into the flickering flames in the grate. I had lost Gretchen. To hold a woman in your arms, the woman you love, to kiss her lips and then to lose her! Oh, I knew that she loved me, but she was a princess, and her word was given, and it could not be! The wind sang mournfully over the sills of the window; thick snow whitened the panes; there was a humming in the chimneys. She was jealous of Phyllis. That was why I knew that she loved me. And the subtle change in Phyllis' demeanor toward me; what did it signify? Gretchen was to be married Thursday because there were no proofs that Phyllis was her sister. What if Gretchen had been Phyllis and Phyllis had been Gretchen. Heigho! I threw some more coal on the fire. The candle sank in the socket. There are some things we men cannot understand—the sea, the heavens and woman. Suddenly I brought both hands down on my knee. The innkeeper! The innkeeper! He knew! In a moment I was rummaging through the stack of time tables. The next south bound train left at 3:20. I looked at the clock: 2:20. My dress suit began to fly around on various chairs. Yes, how simple it was! The innkeeper knew. He had known it all these years. I threw my white cravat on to the table and picked up the most convenient tie. In ten minutes from the time the idea came to me I was completely dressed in traveling garments. I had a day and a half. It would take 20 hours to fetch the innkeeper. I refused to entertain the possibility of not finding him at the inn. I swore to heaven that the nuptials of the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia and the Prince Ernst of Wortumborg should not be celebrated at noon Thursday. I went into the bedroom.

"Pembroke."

"What is it?" came drowsily.

"I am going on a journey."

"One of those cursed orders you get every other day?" he asked.

"No. It's one on my own account this time. I shall be back in 24 hours. Goodby."

My brow was damp; my hands trembled like an excited woman's. Should I win? I had a broken cigar in my pocket. I lit the preserved end at the top of the feeble carriage lamp. I had the compartment alone. Sleep! Not I. Who could sleep when the car wheels and the rattling windows kept saying: "The innkeeper knows! The innkeeper knows!" Every stop was a heartache. Ah, those eight hours were eight separate centuries to me! I looked careworn and haggard enough the next morning when I stepped on the station platform. I wanted nothing to eat, but even a cup of coffee to drink.

To find conveyance to the inn was not an easy task. No one wanted to take the drive. Finally I secured a horse. There was no haggling over the price. And soon I was loping through the snowdrifts in the direction of the old inn. The snow whirled and eddied over the stubble fields, the winds sang past my ears, the trees creaked, and the river flowed on, black and sluggish. It was a dreary scene. It was bitter cold, but I had no mind for that. On, on I went. Two miles were left in the rear. The horse was beginning to breathe hard. Sometimes the snow was up to his knees. What if the old man was not there? The blood sank upon my heart. Once the horse struck a slippery place and nearly fell, but I caught him in time. I could now see the inn, perhaps a mile away, through the leafless trees. It looked dismal enough. The vines hung dead about it, the hedges were wild and scrawny, the roses I knew to be no more, and the squirrel had left his summer home for a warmer nest in the forest. A wave of joy swept over me as I saw a thin stream of smoke winding above the chimney. Some one was there. On, on. Presently I flew up the roadway. A man stood on the porch. It was Stahlberg. When I pushed down my collar, his jaw dropped. I flung the reins to him.

"Where is the innkeeper?" I cried with my first breath.

"In the hall, herr. But"—

I was past him and going through the rooms. Yes, thank God, there he was, sitting before the huge fireplace where the logs crackled and [illegible] his grizzled head sunk between his shoulders, lost in some dream. I tramped in noisily. He started out of his dream and looked around.

"Gott!" he cried. He wiped his eyes and looked again. "Is it a dream or is it you?"

"Flesh and blood!" I cried. "Flesh and blood!"

I closed the door and bolted it. He followed my movements with a mixture of astonishment and curiosity in his eyes.

"Now," I began, "what have you done with the proofs which you took from your wife—the proofs of the existence of a twin sister of the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia?"

CHAPTER XXI.

The suddenness of this demand fairly whirled him, and he fell back into the chair, his eyes bulging and his mouth agape.

"Do you hear me?" I cried. "The proofs!" going up to him with clenched fists. "What have you done with those proofs? If you have destroyed them, I'll kill you."

Then, as a bulldog shakes himself loose, the old fellow got up and squared his shoulders and faced me, his lips compressed and his jaws knotted. I could see by his eyes that I must fight for it.

"Herr Winthrop has gone mad," said he. "The princess Hildegarde never had a sister."

"You lie!" My hands were at his throat.

"I am an old man," he said.

I let my hands drop and stepped back.

"That is better," he said, with a grim smile. "Who told you this impossible tale and what has brought you here?"

"It is not impossible. The sister has been found."

"Found!" I had him this time. "Found!" he repeated. "Oh, this is not credible!"

"It is true. And tomorrow at noon the woman you profess to love will become the wife of the man she abhors. Why? Because you—you refuse to save her!"

"I? How in God's name can I save her?" the perspiration beginning to stand out on his brow.

"How? I will tell you how. Prince Ernst marries Gretchen for her dowry alone. If the woman I believe to be her sister can be proved so, the prince will withdraw his claims to Gretchen's hand. Do you understand? He will not marry for half the revenues of Hohenphalia. It is all or nothing. Now, will you produce those proofs? Will you help me?" The minute hand of the clock was moving around with deadly precision.

"Are you lying to me?" he asked, breathing hard.

"You fool, can't you see that it means everything to Gretchen if you give those proofs? She will be free, free! Will you get those proofs or shall your Goldchen live to curse you?"

This was the most powerful weapon I had yet used.

"Live to curse me?" he said, not speaking to me, but to [illegible]. [illegible] he sat down again and covered his face with his hands. The silence which passed seemed very long. He took away his hands from his eyes with a movement which expressed despair and resignation. "Yes, I will get them. It is years and years ago," he mused absently, "so long ago that I had thought it gone and forgotten. But it was not to be. I will get the proofs," turning to me as he left the chair. "Wait here." He unlocked the door and passed forth. It was a full confession of the deception written by the mother herself and witnessed by her physician, the innkeeper and his wife. Not even the king could contest its genuineness.

"Where is this Dr. Salzberg?"

The innkeeper leaned against the side of the fireplace, staring into the flames.

"He is dead," briefly.

"Who was he?"

"Her late highness' court physician. Oh, have no fear, herr, this new found princess of yours will come into her own," with a bitter smile.

"And why have you kept silent all these years?" I asked.

"Why?" He raised his arms, then let them fall dejectedly. "I loved the Princess Hildegarde. I was jealous that any should share her greatness. I have kept silent because I carried her in my arms till she could walk, because her father cursed her and refused to believe her his own, because she grew around my heart as a vine grows around a rugged oak. And the other? She was nothing to me. I had never seen her. My wife spirited her away when it was night and dark. I took the proofs of her existence as a punishment to my wife, who, without them, would never dare to return to this country again. Herr, when a man loads you with ignominy and contempt and ridicule for something you are not to blame, what do you seek? Revenge. The prince tried to crush this lonely child of his. It was I who brought her up. It was I who taught her to say her prayers. It was I who made her what she is today, a noble woman, with a soul as spotless as yonder snowdrift. That was my revenge."

"Who are you?" I cried. For this innkeeper's affection and [illegible] seemed out of place.

"Who am I?" The smile which lit his face was wistful and sad. "The law of man disavows me. [illegible]. In the eyes of God, which is accountable for our being, I am Gretchen's uncle, her father's brother."

"You?" I was astounded.

"I."

"And who knows of this?"

"The king, the princess and you."

I thrust a hand toward him. "You are a man."

"Wait. Swear to God that her highness shall never know."

"On my honor."

Then he accepted my clasp and looked straight into my eyes.

"And all this to you?"

"I love her."

"And she?"

"It is mutual. Do you suppose she would have put her life before mine if not? She knew that the lieutenant would have killed me."

"Ach! It never occurred to me in that light. I understood it to be a frolic of hers. Will you make her happy?"

"If an honest man's love can do it," said I. "Now, get on [illegible]. You must go to the capital with me. The king would send for you in any case. The next train leaves at [illegible] and to save Gretchen these proofs must be in the chancellor's hands tomorrow morning."

"Yes, my presence will be necessary. Perhaps I [illegible]. Who knows?" His head fell in meditation. "Herr, [illegible] has she been happy?"

"[illegible]"

"You have [illegible] the innkeeper."

"For many years," said I.

And those were the only words that passed between us during that five mile drive. At the station I wired the chancellor that the proofs had been found and requested him to inform the king and Prince Ernst. And then another eight hours dragged themselves out of existence. But Gretchen was mine!

• • • • • • •

The king was dressed in a military blouse, and, save for the small cross suspended from his neck by a chain of gold, there was nothing about him to distinguish his rank. He strode back and forth, sometimes going the whole length of the white room. The chancellor sat at a long mahogany table, and the prince and Mr. Wentworth were seated at either side of him. The innkeeper stood before the chancellor at the opposite side of the table. His face might have been cut from granite, it was so set and impassive. I leaned over the back of a chair at the end of the room. The king [illegible] and fixed his [illegible].

"Was this [illegible]," he asked, "who caused you all [illegible] and anxiety?"

I felt uneasy. My experience with kings was not large.

"No, your majesty," answered the prince. "The gentleman to whom you refer has [illegible]." The prince [illegible] laughed [illegible].

"Ah," said the king, [illegible] a stranger [illegible] to the chancellor."

[illegible]

"I desired the Princess Hildegarde to possess all," was the answer. It was also a challenge to the prince to refute the answer if he dared. "I acknowledge that I have committed a crime. I submit to his majesty's will," bowing reverentially.

The king was stroking his chin, a sign of deep meditation in him.

"Let their highnesses be brought in," he said at last.

The chancellor rose and passed into the anteroom. Shortly he returned, followed by Gretchen. I could see by the expression in her face that she was mystified by the proceeding.

"Her highness the Princess Elizabeth is just leaving the carriage," announced the chancellor, retiring again.

Gretchen looked first at the king, then at the prince. As she saw the innkeeper a wave of astonishment rippled over her face.

"Be seated, your highness," said the king kindly.

She knew that I was in the room, but her eyes never left the king.

The prince was plucking at his imperial. The innkeeper's eyes were riveted on the door. He was waiting for the appearance of her whom he had wronged. Presently Phyllis came in. Her cheeks were red, and her eyes sparkled with excitement. Wentworth nodded reassuringly. The innkeeper was like one stricken dumb. He stared at Phyllis till I thought his eyes would start from their sockets.

"Your majesty has summoned me?" said Gretchen.

"Yes. Explain," said the king to the chancellor.

"Your highness," began the chancellor, "it has been proved by these

Quite a little excitement was caused at the Grand Forks Woolen Mills over the action of 10 of the weavers who left their looms and walked out on a strike Monday morning when given notice that the old schedule of wages would again be put into effect. It seems that about two months ago, owing to the fact that there was some very slow work to be done, the management advanced the scale three-quarters of a cent per yard. But it was the intention to resume the old scale as soon as this particular piece of work was done. When the reduction was announced half the force quit, but their places will soon be filled.

The conclusion reached by the Powers not to demand the death penalty for two of the principal leaders in the Boxer massacres, for the reason that these two are hard to "get at," and the execution "might not be feasible," but to insist upon the execution of the other leaders, who are not making so much show of resistance, or of capacity for resistance, is in line with the modern trend. Just where the justice or satisfaction will come in is not evident to the naked eye, and the attitude of the Powers would be a disgrace to a council of aged women in charge of the Little Sisters of the Poor. Cut off the heads of a few for revenge, and emulate the driver who whipped up the horse that was still pulling on a heavy load, while the balky one got off easy. The only reason there aren't more criticisms floating around gratuitously is because the average citizen is too busy with his own affairs to care.

The following is well said by the Crookston Times, and should be a warning not only to mothers, but to fathers as well: "The mother of Jennie Bosschieter is reported to be unconsoled and unconsolable because the young men held responsible for the death of her daughter at Patterson, New Jersey, are not to suffer the death penalty, but are sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. This is but natural. However, had she insisted upon a mother's privilege of knowing what sort of company her daughter was keeping last October and where she was spending her leisure time, as it was a mother's plain duty to do, the tradegy might never have occurred."

Summing up the joys of the farmer: He doesn't have to enter into competition and strife with any of his neighbors like a merchant: he doesn't have to wrangle for a living like a lawyer: in fact, he can be the most independent man on God's green earth. He has few allurements for corrupting his morals, and his occupation is more conducive to the highest development of his physical powers than any other.

The Crookston City Council at its last meeting voted one thousand dollars as a bonus to the Maplebay Windstacker Co., which has decided to locate its new factory there. A company has been organized and the capital stock placed at $50,000. Two buildings, 48x100 feet, are to be erected.

General DeWet's name will go down in history as a star figure in the Boer war if he continues his successful tactics much longer. The British military authorities are afraid of him, and recent developments show that the British need more troops if they would win.

The Chinese are good to their criminals. The unfortunate condemned to death is given his choice of execution or the privilege to commit suicide.

Mrs. Carrie Nation, the Kansas "joint smasher" is still at it. Mrs. Nation probably is earnest, but the insane asylum is full of earnest ones.

Michael Lambert's team hitched to a jumper, ran away Monday morning. One of the horses broke a leg in the mix up and the animal had to be shot. A splinter of the bone protruded through the skin, presenting a most revolting appearance.

Mrs. Andre Lemieux, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Horace Blivin, at East Grand Forks, returned to the city Monday and was met here by her husband. They proceeded to their home in Garnes Tuesday. Mrs. Lemieux is in feeble health.

J. W. Pinney came up from Willmar Friday with a landseeker, who purchased from Hon. Marcus Johnson a half section of Red Lake county land, with the purpose of moving here in the spring. Mr. Pinney is a partner of Mr. Johnson in the milling business at Willmar.

We acknowledge a pleasant call from our old friend and former townsman, Henry Lemieux, of Garnes. Henry, Ike and their father, own 160 acres of land in Garnes and are successful stock-raisers, having about 50 head of cattle. They are patrons of the Garnes cheese factory and find it pays them well.

John Meier, of the township of North, is in the city consulting an attorney. He is defendant in a suit to establish ownership of a wagon. Mr. Meier is one of the oldest settlers of this county, and has lived on his farm two miles north of Thief River Falls for twenty years. He owns 500 acres of land which he expects to see worth $50 an acre while he is yet young enough to enjoy his wealth.

Dave Pickett and his troupe have been recent visitor to Red Lake Falls. A special from Willmar gives this interesting information: Mrs. Pickett, the white wife of Dave Pickett, the pioneer of the colored vandeville stage, deserted him and his company at Litchfield and, coming to Willmar, took employment as a domestic in the family of J. B. Learn. Her parents live in Toronto, Ont., and she is preparing to return to them. Her husband was at Willmar yesterday, but could not prevail upon her to go back with him.

P. Meehan came down from Thief River Falls Tuesday. He recently purchased eighty acres of land from Chief Moosedung adjoining the city on the North, and has just closed a deal for another eighty contiguous to this which he will have platted as an addition to the city. Mr. Meehan during his absence last summer went to Mexico, where he purchased 40,000 acres of pine land, 250 miles south of the Texan border, paying for it in American money, which is counted two dollars for one down there. As soon as the railroad is extended from Chewawa, a city fifty miles distant, he will begin the manufacture of lumber. Mr. Meehan visited Juneau, Alaska, in his travels, and will probably invest in mining stock there the coming season, when he contemplates making his second trip to Alaska. He is in excellent health, which his old friends here are pleased to note.

The piles for the bridges on the new railroad from Bemidji to Black Duck have been driven at the crossing of the Mississippi, Turtle river and Erickson Lake, at the latter place the soundings were 80 feet. The grading of the road will be completed early in the spring and the track laid as soon as possible thereafter.

A. E. Sorensen, of Emanuelville, has for some years been successfully raising a new Russian grain called spelt. Minnesota and Dakota farmers are now becoming generally interested in this new grain. Foriegn settlements in North Dakota are producing it. The seed was first brought to this country by emigrants from Europe. Farmers who seeded spelt last year state that, although the season was a trying one, good crops were secured, fifty bushels being obtained from one bushel of seed sometimes. The grain is easily grown and stands drought much better than most grains, ripens early and makes a superior feed for animals. It is said that the Canadian Pacific will introduce spelt along its line, and the officials of the proposed Canadian Northern are considering it for the country through which their road is to pass, to the north of the Canadian Pacific.

NEXT MINISTER TO CHINA.

John Goodnow May Succeed the Present Incumbent.

Minneapolis, Jan. 29.—A special to The Journal from Washington says: For a day or two it has been rumored outside of official circles that in the event of a vacancy in the post of minister to China, caused by the resignation or withdrawal of Mr. Conger, the post would be given Consul General John Goodnow of Minnesota, who in his three years of residence in the Orient has made himself thoroughly familiar with Chinese manners, customs and contemporaneous history, and who won the confidence and good will of the government to a degree attained by no other American representative in that country during the Boxer uprisings.

It is not thought to be the intention of the government to recall Minister Conger, or if it is, the fact is kept very quiet. In all probability, however, Mr. Goodnow would be offered the post of ambassador should a vacancy occur. This is conceded quite generally by those who are in position to know something of sentiment at the White House and the state department.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Bill in the Minnesota Legislature to Abolish It.

St. Paul, Jan. 29.—Representative Hendricks has introduced a bill in the house to abolish capital punishment for murder, substituting life imprisonment for it. He also presented a measure fixing 6 per cent as the legal rate of interest in all cases, whether specified or not. His third important bill for the day was the reintroduction of the constitutional amendment which was lost at the last general election, relating to extension of leasing of university and public school lands.

Representative Wallace fathered two savings bank bills. The first adds district and county bonds to the securities in which savings banks may invest. The other allows savings banks which have accumulated real estate to dispose of it, part cash part trade, gradually disposing of the same, instead of for all cash as at present.

FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Omnibus Bill Introduced by Representative Mercer.

Washington, Jan. 31.—Representative Mercer of Nebraska, chairman of the committee on public buildings and grounds, introduced an omnibus bill increasing the limit of cost of public buildings in various parts of the country. It carries about $1,500,000. Among the increases are the following: Aberdeen, S. D., from $87,000 to $100,000; Eau Claire, Wis., $50,000 to $100,000; Creston, Ia., $50,000 to $100,000; Fergus Falls, Minn., $75,000 to $100,000; Helena, Mon., $200,000 to $225,000; St. Cloud, Minn., $50,000 to $68,000; St. Paul, Minn., $1,050,000 to $1,300,000; Oskaloosa, Ia., $50,000 to $65,000.

PLACE FOR SENATOR TOWNE.

General Counsel of the New York Liquid Air Company.

Duluth, Feb. 2.—It is reported from an authentic source that ex-Senator Charles A. Towne has accepted the position of general counsel of the New York Liquid Air company of New York city, and that S. H. Moer, recently judge of the district court of St. Louis county, will do detail work. Judge Moer removed to New York about three weeks ago and has opened up a law office there. It is said Senator Towne accepted the place with the understanding that he would retain his residence in Minnesota.

Clergyman Killed by a Train.

Redwood Falls, Minn., Feb. 1.—Rev. Samuel Andrews, about 60 years old, a Presbyterian minister whose home is in Iowa, was run over by a train at Wabasso, this county, and both legs cut off. He died four hours later. Mr. Andrews contemplated locating at Wabasso as pastor of the churches at that point and at Vesta and was going to the train to start to Iowa for his family when struck by the cars.

Was a Stillwater Man.

Hot Springs, Ark., Feb. 1.—W. R. Lemicke, secretary and treasurer of the Electric Light, Gas and Water company, committed suicide by shooting through the head. Despondency over the recent death of his mother is the supposed cause. Lemicke came here from Stillwater, Minn.

DEATH FROM FEAR.

Girl Became a Maniac, Fearing She Would Be Kidnapped.

Deadwood, S. D., Feb. 4.—Myrtle Stanley of Central City, a raving maniac, died here during the day. About a week ago, C. Stanley, her father, who separated from his wife 17 years ago, came to Deadwood and endeavored to coax his daughter Myrtle to return with him to his home at Denver. The girl sat for three nights guarding her invalid mother and herself from an imaginary attack from Stanley. Signs of insanity developed and she died raving over her father's visit.

R. S. Kingman Dead.

Sparta, Wis., Feb. 1.—R. S. Kingman, well known throughout the West among stock breeders and scientific farmers, is dead after a protracted illness, aged 72. He was at one time part owner of the famous Bob Tail mine near Pikes Peak and was also interested in the Maine tanneries, said to be the largest in the world.

SUES FOR MILLIONS

H. W. PEARSON WANTS GREAT NORTHERN CASH.

Asks $1,500,000 for Locating Coal Mines on Railroad Lands—Northern Steamship Company to Withdraw Its Big Steamers From the Duluth-Buffalo Route—Village of Merritt, First on the Mesaba Range, No More—General State News.

Duluth, Jan. 30.—Papers have been filed at St. Paul in a suit that is of the utmost moment, both as to the amount of money claimed, the character of the defendant and the principle involved.

The suit is brought by H. W. Pearson of Duluth against J. J. Hill and the Great Northern railroad and the amount claimed is a trifle over $1,500,000, and the sum involved in the proceedings is not less than $14,000,000, which is alleged to be the value of property held by Mr. Hill and his road and taken by them after its discovery by Pearson, under a contract with Hill by which Pearson was to have a share in the profits.

But it is as elucidating a new geological theory and as overturning to a large extent previous and present accepted theories that the suit is of chief importance. Pearson has for nearly 20 years made a study of geological conditions and has evolved what may be termed the floodwood theory of the deposition of vegetation sufficient to make coal beds.

He has tested this theory all over the world on known coal beds with satisfactory results and has by its use discovered new coal areas. Among these are the Stockett mines of Montana, which are involved in the present suit, as well as large areas on the Pacific coast.

The complaint alleges that Pearson discovered the Stockett mines by a study of elevations and topography and that he located the limits of the fields, which have since proved to be correct. The Hill interests, he charges, secured thousands of acres under his direction and are now mining there 1,600 tons daily. It is for a share in the profits of this operation that the suit is brought.

While Pearson brings the suit in his own name it is understood that associated with him in his scientific investigations are several leading financiers of Duluth and a number of leading scientists of this country and England.

DULUTH WILL BE CUT OUT.

Plan to Change Route of Northern Steamship Company.

St. Paul, Feb. 2.—The Northern Steamship company is reported to have decided to withdraw its palace steamers North Land and North West from the Duluth-Buffalo route the coming summer and run them between Chicago and Buffalo. The decision is understood to be the outcome of several conferences between President Hill of the Great Northern, Vice President Miller and General Manager Farrington of the steamship company, held at Buffalo. The steamship line has been the summer feeder on the lake for the Great Northern.

It has long been an open secret in passenger circles that the returns from the two handsome steamships have not come up to expectations, and the coming exposition at Buffalo is believed to have been seized upon as a good pretext for the Great Northern management to try the experiment of transferring the vessels to the Buffalo-Chicago route and making other plans for the care of passengers destined for northwestern transpacific points.

MERRITT IS NO MORE.

First Village on Mesaba Range Has Passed From View.

Duluth, Feb. 4.—The last building of the first village on the Mesaba range is being moved. At one time Merritt had 1,500 people; next week there will not be one board upon another to mark its site. All there is left is the village debt for a waterworks plant put in seven or eight years ago. Merritt was at the late Cincinnati and Kanawha mines but these did not amount to much and the rival village of Biwabik, a mile away, drew all the business. Most of the houses were moved some time ago, but the Svea hotel remained till now.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Joint Resolution Adopted by the Minnesota Legislature.

St. Paul, Feb. 5.—The house has adopted the senate joint memorial to congress for the calling of a national constitutional convention for the adoption of a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people. The bill now goes to the governor for his signature.

In the senate a bill was introduced for the establishment of a state sanitarium for consumptives, site and building to cost not over $150,000, provision to be made for 150 patients.

Fortune in Revenue Stamps.

Redwood Falls, Minn., Feb. 2.—The deed transferring the Winona and St. Peter and branches to the Northwestern has been filed here. Revenue stamps to the amount of $18,287 were affixed to the document, although the consideration stated in the deed was only $10, and the assumption of all liabilities. The deed conveys nearly 1,200 miles of road, being all the Minnesota and Dakota lines connecting the Mississippi and Missouri rivers with more than a dozen branch lines.

On the American Shore of the Niagara River on the outskirts of the City of Buffalo, N. Y. within short distance of Niagara Falls, from May 1st to November 1st, 1901, will transpire one of the most important events in the history of the Western Hemisphere. The curtain of the Great Show will be raised, which will present the opening scene in a blaze of glory never before equaled in the history of America. This colossal aggregation of exhibits will show the wonderful achievements of science, exemplified by the matchless genius of the two Americas, and fittingly portray their high educational values.

The Nickel Plate Road has issued attractive and valuable descriptive folder pamphlets, elaborately illustrating the Pan-American Exposition, fully describing this important event, and elaborately illustrating its Buildings and Grounds.

The Nickel Plate Road is the short line between Chicago and Buffalo. The popular Passenger Line offers convenient train service between Chicago and Buffalo, as it does also between Chicago and New York City, Boston and all points east, with modern trains supplied with the latest designs of Drawing Room Buffet Pullman Sleeping Cars, and Dining Cars of the highest order. The Nickel Plate Road offers meals in its Dining Cars on the popular American Individual Club System, ranging in price to suit the appetite, from thirty-five cents to one dollar, but no meals at a cost greater than one dollar. No excess fares are charged on any train of the Nickel Plate Road.

Call on any ticket agent for a Pan-American Folder of the Nickel Plate Road, or address, John Y. Calahan, General Agent, Adams St., Chicago, Ill. Parties desiring hotel or rooming accomodations at Buffalo or Niagara Falls, during any period of the Pan-American Exposition, are invited to apply by letter or otherwise to F. J. Moore, General Agent, Nickel Plate Road, 291 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

WOMEN'S INFLUENCE.

She Is Largely Responsible for the Character of Members of the Other Sex.

"The Young Man Out of Business Hours" is the theme upon which Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, discourses in a recent article in the Saturday Evening Post, in the course of which he says:

"There is positively nothing of such value to young men—yes, and to old men, too—as the chastening and powerful influence for good which women bring into their lives. I should be the last man in the world to suggest that a young man should keep himself 'tied to his mother's apron strings,' as is the saying of the people, and this is not what I mean when I earnestly suggest that he keep as close to his mother's opinions, teachings and influence as the circumstances of life will permit. The same thing, of course, may be said with reference to a man's wife—even more strongly, if possible. But the conversation and opinion of any good woman are, as a practical matter and a measure of worldly wisdom, simply beyond price. She is wise with that sublimated reason called 'woman's instinct.'

"There is, too, a human quality kept alive and growing in your character by woman's association and influence that, as a matter of business power in meeting the world and its problems, is far and away beyond the value of the craft of the trickiest schemer of affairs and business and politics who ever lived. It is a saying of the farmer folks among whom I was raised that such and such a person 'has principle,' meaning that the person so described is upright, trustworthy, judicious; that such a person's attitude toward God and man and the world is correct.

"Women have principle in precisely the sense in which that term is used by the country people. They will keep you true to the order of things in the constitution of the universe. They will do this, not so much by preaching at you as by the influence of their very personality. The man who has gotten out of touch with womankind is not to be feared. He is to be pitied rather than feared, for he is out of harmony with the world. He is disarmed. No matter how large his mind and great his courage, he is neutralized for all natural, proper-proportioned, and therefore enduring effort.

"I know a physician who, still young, has reached the head of his profession in this country. Sundays and the evenings with his wife and children are not enough for him. He takes Wednesdays also. Precisely this same thing is done by the great young captain of finance and affairs whom I described first in this paper as being a total abstainer. This is not done for the rest it gives these men; or if it is done for that it is not the greatest benefit they get out of it. They come back to their work with clearer and stronger conceptions of human character and of truth in the abstract and the concrete; with which their profession or business only has most dealt. They have a new tenderness, a larger tolerance and a broader vision of life and humanity, and, therefore, of their business, which is merely a phase of life and affairs."

Travel.

When the physician prescribed travel abroad the beautiful invalid filled as to her eyes with tears.

"It is impossible!" she sighed. "Will not travel in this country answer?"

"Possibly," replied the man of medicine, with manifest reluctance; "provided you are extremely careful to call your baggage 'luggage' and the brakeman 'guard!'"—Puck.

A LOVER'S DECEPTION.

Underhand Scheme by Which He Got His Girl to Acknowledge That She Loved Him.

The young man in love is an interesting creature. Given a sympathetic listener, he will tell many things in a voice that is awed, because what he is relating seems so holy to him, says the Philadelphia Record. Such a young man said: "I couldn't feel sure my girl really cared for me, so I wrote myself this telegram: 'Will you go as accountant for tea firm to China at salary of $60 per week? Start Thursday. Answer at once.' I signed the name of a fictitious firm, and showed the girl the telegram as soon as I got to her house that night.

"She read it and then she looked at me, gravely. 'What do you think about it?' she asked. 'I don't know what to think,' said I. She mused a little while. 'Do you want to go?' she asked me. 'If it wasn't for you I'd want to go,' I answered. Then she said, in a firm voice: 'Do whatever you think best.' 'I'd go if it wasn't for you,' I repeated.

"She sat very still, looking at the fire. Then all of a sudden she began to cry. 'Oh, don't go! don't go!' she wailed. 'Don't go and leave me alone. What would I do—what would I do—without you?' So I told her I wouldn't go. It is a grand thing to have a girl care for you so much as that. I know that this girl loves me truly."

"If I had been the girl," said the young man's listener, "I should have said: 'Accept the offer, and we'll be married at once and start for China together.'" The young man grinned. "Gosh! I hadn't thought of that," he admitted. "Wouldn't I have been in a fix, though, if she had said that?"

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

On the island of Alaska, 30 miles west of Juneau, a large deposit of gypsum has been discovered.

The Philippine islands are already covered with a fairly complete telegraphic system. Under Spanish rule this probably would not have happened in a thousand years.

The remnant of the once great Penobscot tribe of Indians now living on an island near Oldtown, Me., have their own form of government. At their recent election they chose a prohibitionist chief named Mitchell Attean by a vote of 25 to 23.

Property owners in the Fox lake region of Wisconsin have united to drive German carp out of the waters in that vicinity, and it is intended to seine the Niagara river for the same purpose. The carp are making havoc among the game fish.

Efforts are being made in Beaufort, S. C., to get an appropriation for rehabilitating and preserving the "old fort" which stands on the spot where Jean Ribault landed 300 years ago. It was built by the Spaniards after they had driven out the French.

It was not until 1827 that the two wings of the national capitol building were completed and not until 1857 that the dome was finished. The total expenditures up to that time reached $12,000,000. Since that date two wings have been added, with a marble terrace, which have brought the entire cost of the building to $16,000,000, which is a small sum compared with that expended upon several of the state capitols, which do not approach it in magnitude, dignity or beauty.

In the crypt under the dome of the capitol at Washington is a subterranean chamber intended as a tomb for Washington, but his family objected to the removal of the remains from Mount Vernon. A "keeper of the crypt" was carried on the pay rolls at a salary of $300, whose sole business was to keep a light burning in the vault. This practice continued until 1865, when the appropriation was discontinued, and the light, which had burned constantly for 50 years, was allowed to go out.

In a Hurry.

"How d'ye do," said the busy man. "Will you marry me?"

"O—er," she gasped. "This is so sudden! I must have time to think."

"I—"

"Say, don't keep me waiting on the ... or I won't have money enough left to buy the ring. I came in an auto cab and they charge by the minute, you know."—Philadelphia Press.

A Good Sleep.

Nothing adds more to vigor of body and cheerfulness of mind, or aids so well in chasing away the lines of worry and care from the weary brow, as good, sound, refreshing sleep. But when the gray matter of the brain has been robbed of its vitality and constructive strength by weak, worn-out and exhausted nerves, sleep gives way to restless tossing and long hours of feverish distress. Do you want a good sleep? You can get it if you go about it right.

"My nerves were so shattered after a severe attack of pneumonia that the least noise would make me feel like screaming at the top of my voice. I could not get a night's sleep, and would often awaken twelve or fifteen times before morning. One day I purchased a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine on trial, and before it was half gone I could go to sleep without an effort, and awake feeling rested and refreshed."

P. E. A. FLING, Hartshorne, I. T.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Relaxes the strain on the excited nerves and gives the repair shops of the brain a chance to make good the damage of the waking hours. It is a great brain-food and nerve-builder.

Last winter the farmers were busy cutting brush. They save themselves this work now by turning their stock in it to fatten up on. STOCK FEED.

A great many farmers in the southern part of the State are feeding straw sprinkled with low grade flour. This makes an excellent feed for cattle, because in this way cattle will eat the straw up clean. If you are short of hay try this feed. We will sell you a low grade flour at $18.00 per ton in ton lots. A ton of this flour and two tons of straw are equal in feeding qualities to three tons of hay.

We also have ground corn, whole corn and ground feed for sale at very low prices.

Try some of our New York State Buckwheat.

THE BAND CONCERT

FRIDAY NIGHT'S EVENT A VERY ENJOYABLE AND SUCCESSFUL ONE.

OPERA HOUSE PACKED---GOOD MUSIC AND MUCH ENTHUSIASM.

Music, Song and Dance, was the program at the Opera House last Friday night when the Crookston band assisted by Miss Gleason, Mrs. Riggs and E. R. Ryan, appeared for the first time before a Red Lake Falls audience. The program opened with a band selection "American Ideal March," and the spirit of the audience was at once manifest by the most pronounced applause, which amounted to nothing less than an ovation, and the band was compelled to repond to an encore, although there was a dance to follow, and Prof. Riggs seemed inclined to push the programme with a view to preventing too late a start for the dance. E. R. Ryan's banjo solos were good, and Mrs. Riggs the accompanist, seemed to fascinate the audience by her winning grace. The first appearance of Miss Gleason, Crookston's favorite soprano, was awaited with much interest, and the audience was in the right mood to accord her a fine reception. "The Swallows" gave her opportunity to display a remarkable voice, of great range, depth and power, under fine control. She responded to a tumultous encore with "Annie Laurie." Her second song "Angel's Serenade" was if anything better than the first, but although a storm of applause lasting several minutes with unabated vehemence followed, she could not be induced to more than bow her acknowledgments. The fact that Miss Gleason had probably by accident omitted bringing a suitable costume was regretted, and was the only feature that in any way detracted from her otherwise unclouded success here.

Prof. Riggs, who leads the band, in a few well chosen words, thanked the people of Red Lake Falls for their unmistakably cordial reception.

The ball, following, was well patronized, and the affair was a financial as well as social a success.

SENATE KILLED IT.

THE BILL FOR A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION LAID LOW IN SENATE.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St Paul, Feb. 11.—The senate has killed the bill calling for a constitutional convention to revise the constitution of the state. The vote on the measure was 29 for and 27 against it, but as it required a two-third majority, it was declared lost. The objection to the bill was that the constitution is now about as good as it would be made, and any great changes would cause not only much trouble and confusion, but would be expensive to the state.

A Queer Case.

Last week The Gazette's special despatches contained a brief item concerning the Leinfelder estate. Additional details will no doubt be of interest to our readers:

A case which would furnish material for several dime novels has risen at La Crosse, Wis. owing to a rich widow entering a convent there.

Some time ago, Mrs. Hall of La Crosse, Wis. joined a convent and took the name in religion of Sister Antonie. Before joining she turned over her two young children, a boy and a girl, to her brother Joseph Anthony Leinfelder, who raised them as his own. Mrs. Hall built the convent and hospital and owned other valuable property and as she did not deed her property to the church and left no will things are in a muddle.

Michael Leinfelder (or Hall) has entered suit for his mother's estate and as she died suddenly without making a will although she evidently intended the church should have the convent and hospital, he is likely to win out.

M'KUSICK'S MEASURE

A BILL TO PREVENT PEOPLE FROM BECOMING LAND POOR.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 11.—Senator McKusick has introduced in the senate a bill which looks toward preventing land monopolies. It provides that no one person or corporation shall have the right to own more than 5,000 acres of land in the state. The bill provides that the rule shall not apply to lands taken for debts nor to companies buying lands for the purpose of disposing of them to settlers, provided they are disposed of within ten years. It is not probable that the bill will pass.

IT PASSED THE HOUSE

THERE WILL BE A FIGHT IN THE SENATE, WHERE THE BILL MAY DIE.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St Paul, Feb. 11.—The Hurd bill to place the office of the state oil inspector on a salary basis has passed the house, only fourteen negative votes being recorded against it. There was something of a fight in the committee, but this was defeated and the house had no difficulty with it. The measure will probably go to the senate this week, where, it is hoped by the oil inspector and his friends, it can be killed. Every effort will be made by the ring to slaughter the bill either in the senate or to refer it to some committee where it may be pigeonholed.

Miller---Verboncouer.

Mr. Napoleon Miller and Miss Ida Verboncouer were united in the holy bonds of matrimony at 10 o'clock Monday morning at St. Joseph's church parsonage, the Rev. E. Fayolle officiating.

Miss Agnes Verboncouer was bridesmaid, and Mr. Joseph Miller, groomsman. After the ceremony the wedding party, consisting only of the relatives of the young people, drove to the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mose Verboncouer where an elaborate wedding breakfast awaited them.

The bride and groom have both lived here from childhood and are most popular with the young people in their large social circle.

A reception will be tendered them this evening by North Star Court C. O. F. of which the groom is a member.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

BRAKEMAN KILLED, ENGINEER INJURED IN RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service

Butte, Mont., Feb. 14, 1901.—A train loaded with lumber and mining timber on a branch of the Northern Pacific running to Allee Mine above the city when at the top of the mountain became unmanageable, tearing down hill and through the city like lightning finally piled up in a heap of ruins on the mining dump. The engineer was fatally injured and the brakeman killed outright. By a miracle, numerous teams and people on streets crossed by tracks escaped.

FIRE AT APPLETON.

ANOTHER PAPER MILL SUSTAINS HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

Appleton, Wis., Feb. 14. 1901.—The Kimberly and Clark paper mill plant, one of the largest in the United States, valued at more than a million dollars, was partially destroyed by fire last night. Loss about half a million dollars. Fire chief Anderson lost his life by suffocation.

WAREDN WOLFER.

THE STATE PRISON BOARD DECAPITATES WARDEN REEVE.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service

St. Paul, Feb. 11.—Henry Wolfer will on March 1 succeed C. McC. Reeve as warden of the Stillwater prison. The election of Wolfer was made at a meeting of the prison board held in Stillwater a few days ago and was in furtherance of a direct plan to remove Reeve. Reeve was colonel of the Thirteenth Minnesota and a brigader general in the Philippines. On his return from the islands he was appointed warden by Gov. Lind. It is said that the new appointments on the board were made by Gov. Van Sant on the promise that the appointees would oust Reeve and put Wolfer back in his old place.

Vic's Letter.

Calamba, P. I. Dec. 25. 1900.

Editor Gazette:

It is with pleasure that I will take a few moments to write a few lines to let you know how we are getting along.

I will first tell you about our mess or Christmas dinner we have just eaten. I was put in charge of the mess which now numbers eighteen men and one officer, and for each man I received rations as follows: Beef 20 oz; flour, 18 oz; beans, 2⅗ oz; potatoes, 12 4-5 oz; onions, 3⅕ oz; coffee, 1 7-25; sugar, 2 2-5 oz; vinigar, 8-25 gills; salt, 16-25 oz; pepper, 1-25 oz; soap 16-25; candles, 6-25 oz: this is for each man per day and besides I received $1.00 per man per month.

I planned a good bill of fare for Christmas dinner. I had the help of a good cook and he and I worked hard to get it up.

BILL OF FARE.

Christmas dinner of Engineers detathment at Calumba P. I.

Oyster stew.
Turkey. Oyster dressing.
Chicken. Gravy.
Mashed potatoes, Irish.
Sweet potatoes, French fried.
Stew sweet corn. Pickles.
Apricot pie. Jelly cake.
Bread, butter, tea, milk.

A bottle of whiskey and a box of cigars was donated by Lieut. Sherwood and A. Cheuny, and were passed around the tables. As a usual thing the boys always always eat on their bed or in such convenient places as they can find, out of tin dishes, but to their surprise for Christmas dinner each man had his place at a well decorated table, and ate out of china dishes, and with cups and saucers. Our officer usually eats in his private room but today said he could no longer stay away. So he acted as father at the table. He expressed himself as being well satisfied and said it was the best dinner he had ever seen put up for private soldiers out of their rations alone. I am pleased at such a success, and feel proud of it.

I was on the first of this month recommended for first class private and expect to rank as such from the first of the year.

Tonight there is an entertainment given by the hospital corp and the women nurses. All soldiers and officers are invited, and it is said that this town will be the gayest on the Island tonight.

This town is well situated and healthful.

The road we are running is from Calamba to Luke Tool, a distance of about 100 or 120 miles.

There is good sewer system here. The water flows from the mountains and down along the road and then branches off into each street in little stone gutter and finally reaches the river all in one. At the hospital this water is now fixed to flow through the whole yard.

The natives are enjoying a three days' holiday, the 24th, 25th, 26th of December. This is all for this time.

I remain as ever,

"Vic"

NEWS IN MINNESOTA

The Columbia elevator at Minnesota Falls has been destroyed by fire.

Mrs. Matilda Folsom is dead of Taylors Falls, aged 82. She came to Minnesota in 1856.

Henry Wolfer has been chosen warden of the Stillwater penitentiary to succeed General Reeve.

Fire at St. Cloud destroyed the West hotel and adjoining buildings, causing a loss of $125,000.

The Duluth board of trade has taken action as to grades of flax, and will make the new grade of the st t board the standard after June 15. This grade permits 25 per cent of d[illegible] damaged seed in a bushel.

John Mattson, a farmer living in the town of Colfax, Kandiyohi county, is dead of smallpox. There have been over three hundred cases of the disease in Kandiyohi county, but Mattson's death is the second one reported.

The state prison board has granted a parole to James H. Southall, former chief clerk of the government engineer's office in St. Paul, whose issuance of fraudulent labor checks was estimated as reaching over half a million dollars.

Captain George E. Gibson of Duluth, who is home from the Philippine campaign on a furlough on account of a severe wound caused by a Filipino bullet, will receive, it is expected, either a commission as captain or paymaster in the regular army.

The steamer Bon Ami was shut out of Duluth harbor Saturday by the ice, and spent all the afternoon and most of the night in breaking through and getting to her dock for the winter. This makes the actual close of navigation for the season of 1900, Feb. 9.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Monday, Feb. 4.

Eighty-seven members of the house were present at roll call Monday evening after a recess from Saturday. Three bills were passed, one of them repealing the broad wagon tire law of 1895. A bill fixing the maximum penalty for kidnapping at 20 years went through without opposition.

Senate not in session.

Tuesday, Feb. 5.

The senate took up the calendar and cleared it. The bills passed were the Wilson measures allowing tenants to reclaim leased premises upon payment of arrears in rent, and to allow the surveyors general to open new log records, and the Jackson house bill relating to chattle mortgages. The resolution abolishing the clerkship held by J. S. Vandiver was defeated.

The house session was brief and uneventful. The only feature of even passing interest was the Peterson resolution to provide the inmates of the Soldiers' home with overcoats. Eight bills were introduced.

Wednesday, Feb. 6.

Hurd's bill to put the oil inspector on a salary recommended to pass by the house. Measure to provide for normal schools by direct taxation defeated. Twenty-eight bills were introduced.

The senate session was brief. Nine bills were presented and probably the most important was the Doly measure for the prohibition of trusts and pools, intended to supplement the act of 1898.

Thursday, Feb. 7.

By a vote of 97 to 14 the house passed the Hurd bill placing the state oil inspector on a salary instead of a fee basis. The bill providing for a tax commission also passed. Among others passed was Armstrong's bill allowing free tuition at the state university to Spanish war veterans.

The Wilson bill, calling a constitution convention, was defeated in the senate, 23 to 27, not receiving the necessary two-thirds vote. The McCarthy bill relating to a change of venue where the judge had been at any time employed as counsel in a case coming before him was passed.

Friday, Feb. 8.

Resolution adopted in the senate providing for a committee of five to investigate and determine how many useless employes there were on the senate pay roll. Senator Jepson introduced a bill providing for the reorganization of the state medical board. Five bills were passed.

The house spent most of the session on two measures—Burns' bill to allow various persons and companies to erect telegraph and telephone poles and string wires and Representative Berg's bill to allow counties to fund their floating indebtedness.

Saturday, Feb. 9.

Representative Deming introduced a bill in the house, which, if enacted, would permit the board of state prison managers to release the Younger brothers. A bill giving individuals the right to erect telephone and telegraph poles along the public highways was passed.

Bill introduced in the senate to change the present mode of filing warranty deeds, etc. It follows the Illinois law.

North Dakota Elevator Burns.

Grand Forks, N. D., Feb. 8.—The Imperial elevator at Milton was destroyed by fire during the morning with all its contents, 6,000 bushels of wheat and 4,000 bushels of flax. The total loss will reach $10,000. The building and contents were owned by the Imperial Elevator company of Minneapolis. The loss is fully covered by insurance.

PIONEER MINNESOTAN.

Captain Russell Blakeley Dead After a Long Illness.

St. Paul, Feb. 5.—Captain Russell Blakeley is dead of general debility after an illness of several months. He was in the 86th year of his age.

Captain Blakeley came to St. Paul in 1856 and was one of the men most prominently connected with the growth and industrial prosperity of Minnesota as a territory and in its earlier days of statehood. He was one of the pioneers in the upper Mississippi river packet trade, a partner in the first express business conducted in Minnesota, the originator of the plan by which the Hudson Bay Trading company's traffic was diverted to the Red river and the navigation of that river opened up, at one time controlled the United States mail contracts in the state and was one of the projectors and original stockholders and directors of the St. Paul and Sioux City railroad.

TO PARDON YOUNGERS.

Bill to That Effect in the Minnesota Legislature.

St. Paul, Feb. 12.—Representative Deming has introduced in the legislature a bill to provide for paroling of life convicts who have served 25 years, less good behavior time, or 23 1-2 years. This, if enacted into a law, would provide for the pardon of the Younger brothers, two of whom are still in the state prison at Stillwater for connection with a bank robbery at Northfield 23 years ago. For the last 15 years their friends have never given up hope of securing their release from prison, the board of pardons and half a dozen governors having been appealed to and previous attempts to secure favorable legislation having been made.

HEAVY LOSSES FROM FIRE.

Insurance Companies Lost in Minnesota Last Year.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—Last year was anything but one of prosperity for the fire insurance companies doing business in Minnesota. The insurance agents and actuaries figured that 1899 was a year of discouragement because the loss ratio for Minnesota had jumped to .52 from .49 in 1898 and .45 in 1897. Last year the loss ratio was .70. The insurance companies doing business in the state last year, 168 in number, received in premiums $4,182,492, or $5,827 more than during the previous year. The losses last year were $2,908,218, or $765,077 more than in 1899. The increase in losses as compared with premiums was $759,250.

Southall Is Paroled.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—The state prison board has granted a parole to James H. Southall, former chief clerk of the government engineer's office in this city, whose issuance of fraudulent labor checks was estimated as reaching over half a million dollars, being disposed of in all parts of the United States.

Seventeen Horses Burned.

St. Paul, Feb. 7.—Fire completely destroyed a large barn belonging to the St. Paul Sanitation company on the levee at the foot of Kentucky street causing a loss of $5,000. Seventeen horses were burned to death. Several tons of hay and 20 sets of harness were also destroyed.

Duluth Municipal Election.

Duluth, Feb. 6.—The municipal election for minor offices was very quiet, the only contest of importance being in the First ward, where W. S. Moore, a prominent grain man, defeated both Republican and Democratic nominees. Political honors were about evenly divided.

Columbia Elevator Burned.

Granite Falls, Minn., Feb. 8.—The Columbia elevator at Minnesota Falls, two miles east of this place, was destroyed by fire during the night. The elevator contained about 8,000 bushels of wheat. The fire is supposed to have started from a defective stove pipe.

Wolfer Again Warden.

St. Paul, Feb. 9.—At a meeting of the state prison board at Stillwater the office of warden was declared vacant, General Reeve declining to resign. Former Warden Henry Wolfer was then chosen to fill the vacancy thus created.

Minnesota University Regents.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—Governor Van Sant has reappointed Stephen Mahoney of the board of regents of the university and appointed Dr. D. C. Stricker of New Ulm as a new member of that board.

NORTHERN AIR LINE.

Financiers Ready to Go Ahead When President Signs the Bill.

Sioux City, Ia., Feb. 12.—The promoters of the Northern Air line between Sioux City and Omaha, it is said here, have made all arrangements for the financing of the project, the money to be forthcoming as soon as the bill extending the charter of the company through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservations is signed by the president. This bill has already passed the senate and has been favorably reported to the house. The road will be bonded for probably $4,000,000.

North Dakota Elevator Burns.

Grand Forks, N. D., Feb. 8.—The imperial elevator at Milton was destroyed by fire during the morning with all its contents, 6,000 bushels of wheat and 4,000 bushels of flax. A department devoted to the interests of Wylie and the district tributary. Subscriptions received by H. P. Johnson.

One of the most prosperous business men of this place is O. T. Romsos. Mr. Romsos was for many years clerk for P. E. Smidesang, when, owing to his adaptability to such business, he made many friends who now are his regular customers. He started in business for himself with only a few dozen of overalls and a little tobacco as his stock. Mr. Romsos has ever since been increasing his stock, 'till now his shelves are crowded. He has an assistant who as well as himself is kept busy behind the counters. Ole told the editor of this page the other day that he is a believer in advertising, which shows that he is a business man with up-to-date ideas. The business firm of Leppert Bros., yet in its infancy is and has been doing wonderfully well. We are anxious for the success of our town. This depends largely upon the merchants and the farmers help by patronizing them. We expect to get a number of new settlers here by spring. Let us make everything appear the best we can, to cheer the new comers from the older parts.

The editor of this page has just returned from a visit at Red Lake Falls where he visited the establishment where the items that herald the happenings of our neighborhood and vicinity, are pressed on the white surface paper. He has been taken through the entire building and shown all the different types and saw the great printing press which the publisher owns. He especially noticed the page for Wylie Gazette lying there showing plainly its head and advertisements. He was informed that the type used for this page was a trifle larger than the others. This is of great value to the readers who wishes to be well posted, and reads a good deal— You can read Wylie Gazette while your eyes rest: when you want your ambition gratified as to information with little strain to the optic nerve.

Pan-American Exposition.

On the American Shore of the Niagara River on the outskirts of the City of Buffalo, N. Y., within short distance of Niagara Falls, from May 1st to November 1st, 1901, will transpire one of the most important events in the history of the Western Hemisphere. The curtain of the Great Show will be raised, which will present the opening scene in a blaze of glory, never before equaled in the history of America. This colossal aggregation of exhibits will show the wonderful achievements of science, exemplified by the matchless genius of the two Americas, and fittingly portray their high educational values.

The Nickel Plate Road has issued attractive and valuable descriptive folder pamphlets, elaborately illustrating the Pan-American Exposition, fully describing this important event, and elaborately illustrating the Buildings and Grounds.

The Nickel Plate Road is the short line between Chicago and Buffalo. That popular Passenger Line offers competent train service between Chicago and Buffalo, as it does also between Chicago and New York City, Boston and all points east, with modern trains, supplied with the latest designs of Drawing Room Buffet Pullman Sleeping Cars, and Dining Car service of the highest order. The Nickel Plate Road offers meals in its Dining Cars on the popular American Individual Club System, ranging in prices to suit the appetite, from thirty-five cents to one dollar, but no meals at a cost greater than one dollar. No excess fares are charged on any train of the Nickel Plate Road.

Call on any ticket agent for a Pan-American Folder of the Nickel Plate Road, or address, John Y. Calahan, General Agent, Adams St., Chicago, Ill. Parties desiring hotel or rooming accomodations at Buffalo or Niagara Falls, during any period of the Pan-American Exposition, are invited to apply by letter or ortherwise to F. J. Moore, General Agent, Nickel Plate Road, 291 Main St, Buffalo, N. Y.

POPULAR EMBROIDERIES.

Pretty Designs That Are Now in Favor with the Devotees of Dress.

The majority of the embroidered dresses just now are done on black or ecru lace, though some are on silk or satin; while a good peau de soie seems the favorite make, says a fashion authority. By lace must be understood the very wide valenciennes and other nets turned out by Norman and Nottingham looms, many of which take the entire length of a skirt and low bodice between the selvedges. They are far too fragile to be stretched in frames, and are simply tacked over the papers on which the designs are traced. These are so elaborate that several women work at once on the same dress, or it would never be finished in time, and they are generally quite independent of the pattern in the net itself. Some lay on straight or sinuous lines of black velvet, and others edge them with gold or silver braid, or with gold spangles, or tiny crystal beads, or all three. Vast quantities of fancy lace braids are also used, and delicate chainstitch traceries in the finest gold or silver thread. Many designs are arranged so as to leave vacant medallions, into which most exquisitely embroidered sprays of silken flowers on gossamer-like gauze are afterwards introduced. All is done by swift yet dainty fingers that never make a false or a loose stitch, and, as may be imagined, such work engrosses the whole attention, as the least suspicion of drawing the thread or puckering would be fatal.

Silken robes are cut and secured into shape and stretched in frames. The favorite ornamentation just now is groups of single sprays of roses, both bud and blossom, and just enough foliage to give the graceful touch of nature, embroidered in such exquisite shades that they are no doubt often supposed to be painted. The connecting lines are done in tiny paillettes of every sparkling hues, and the flowers themselves are marvels of ingenuity. Small petals of pink or amber satin are laid on the silk and then covered with puffed morsels of white or pink silk gossamer gauze to form a raised blossom, sometimes centered or caught down with a single bead or spangle, but there is no visible stitch.

Occasionally a chintz gauze is employed, and to see it in the piece suggests nothing so much as a translucent slice cut out of a rainbow. In the case of a life-sized spray of rose leaves the underlay is green satin, veiled with white gauze, and so delicately veined and shaded with silk as to give all the effect of water color.

Black and white for half mourning is also in great demand, and the dress executed in lace or gauze, with empire designs, in sparkling lines of jet, silk and silver, and with motifs in black or white satin or velvet, much overlaid with white silk and fine chenille, are legion. The materials for these embroideries are got together from all parts of Europe and as carefully collected as curios or even gems. A beautiful black lace skirt is covered with a design of bunches of lilac and wisteria leaves, all in black paillettes, and a very happy combination it is, for the wisteria foliage is graceful and that of the lilac is heavy.

Aiguillettes or "dangles" are conspicuous in the trimmings of the day and they are made separately or in groups, finished with gold, steel or jet ornaments.

Arabesque and other designs wrought in the "dented" pearls that so closely resemble real ones are much used, and are so made that they can be cut into complete separate parts. White and biscuit-colored cloths are embroidered in chainstitch with silk and tinsel threads that are gorgeous when seen separately, but combine into a very subdued yet rich-looking whole, for the cuffs, lapels and revers of tailor-made gowns.

A Good Sleep.

Nothing adds more to vigor of body and cheerfulness of mind, or aids so well in chasing away the lines of worry and care from the weary brow, as good, sound, refreshing sleep. But when the gray matter of the brain has been robbed of its vitality and constructive strength by weak, worn-out and exhausted nerves, sleep gives way to restless tossing and long hours of feverish distress. Do you want a good sleep? You can get it if you go about it right.

"My nerves were so shattered after a severe attack of pneumonia that the least noise would make me feel like screaming at the top of my voice. I could not get a night's sleep, and would often awaken twelve or fifteen times before morning. One day I purchased a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine on trial, and before it was half gone I could go to sleep without an effort, and awake feeling rested and refreshed."

P. E. A. FLING, Hartshorne, I. T.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Relaxes the strain on the excited nerves and gives the repair shops of the brain a chance to make good the damage of the waking hours. It is a great brain-food and nerve-builder.

The Canadian government has decided to buy out all the Canadian telegraph systems. The purpose is to extend them and to operate them in connection with the postal department as is done in Great Britain. It is believed that the change from private to public ownership of telegraphs will result in making the service both cheaper and better. In Canada the government has for many years successfully operated the Intercolonial railway from Montreal to Sydney, Cape Breton, and connecting roads in the maritime provinces. The service on these roads is excellent, the rates reasonable, and the revenue more than sufficient to cover the operating expenses and the fixed charges. The experiment of the government ownership of telegraph lines in Canada will be watched with interest in this country.

Gen. A. R. Chaffee, one of the three men nominated by the President this week—Gen. S. B. M. Young and Gen. Arthur McArthur were the other two—to be major generals in the reorganized regular army, will be the first general officer of the regular army promoted from the ranks. Gen. Chaffee, who is now in command of the American troops in Pekin, began his military career as a private in the famous Sixth Cavalry. Gen. Chaffee's nomination jumped him over Gens. Wade, Merriam, Ludlow and McArthur and fifty four colonels who held higher relative rank in the regular army than he did. There are two vacancies yet to be filled in the rank of major general, as the new law provides for six and Gen. Miles has been nominated to be Lieutenant General.

The attempt which is being made by the Democrats of the state to secure the return to the party of the old line Democrats who broke away four or five years ago may result in the election of a new man as chairman of the state committee. Mr. Rosing has proven a valuable man in the position, but many of the Democrats are anxious for the election of R. T. O'Connor, admitted to be one of the best politicians in the state. Mr. Rosing would, of course, remain a member of the committee. During the last campaign Mr. O'Connor, while not a member of the committee, was prominent about headquarters and was called in consultation daily.

Gov. Van Sant and Auditor Dunn are equally committed to the board of control bill, which makes it in effect an administration measure, and probably assures its passage by both houses. It is represented by the friends of the bill that the board will not only take the place of the present board of corrections and charities but that it will do away with the expense of a dozen or more local governing boards and greatly reduce the operating expenses of state institutions.

Crookston is up against the county division proposition again, and the people there are considering the advisability of going in with one wing of the division army to let the eastern portion of the county off. As Polk county now appears on the map she is the worst incongruity ever, and the divisionists have in this a sufficient reason for demanding a change if there was no other.

Some miserable wretch stole the only night dress owned by Editor Egley, of the Erskine Enterprise, while it was hanging on the line to dry; and the sad story is told in last week's Enterprise.

He saw her lying so still and white.

Rich Treat for Readers of This Paper

A serial story by Rev Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," the most widely read story of the past decade, will be printed in this paper, beginning soon. It is entitled and treats of capital and labor. Look for the first chapters.

His Brother's Keeper

The proposition to reduce the rate of interest on deferred payments on school lands sold by the state to farmers from 5 to 4 per cent is again before the legislature. This bill was passed by the house two years ago, but defeated in the senate. It was introduced on the motion of State Auditor Dunn, who claims that 4 per cent. is more than the average interest rate secured on state investments, and that the proposed reduction will be a relief to the actual settlers who have bought state lands.

The Senate was not willing to accept the promise of the present Corps of West Point cadets to engage in no more hazing, and has made it certain that the practice will be stopped for good and all by adding an amendment to the Military Academy appropriation bill, providing not only for the expulsion of any cadet guilty of hazing but making him ineligible to hold a commission in either the army or navy.

At the October term of court the jury awarded Amos Adams a verdict of $5,000 in the damage suit against the Great Northern railway and the city of Thief River Falls, and $4,000 to Susanna Cunningham, in a like action. In answer to the petition of defendants for judgment notwithstanding the verdict Judge Watts denies each and every petition, but cuts down the amount to $3,500 and $2,500 respectively. H. Rami Fortier, the progressive Gentilly farmer, who represents his district on the Polk county board, was in the city yesterday. He is well known here, being, in fact, a personal friend of three-fourths of the residents of this vicinity, and his advice is certainly given for their good and ought to be followed. Farmers, the creamery has made your brethren in Southern Minnesota the heaviest bank depositors, and if you will profit by the experience of others, you will throw prejudice aside, and bring your milk to the creamery. Our creamery is built, and there is no liability to assume by becoming a patron. Simply bring in your milk and get your pay each month. No notes to sign or liabilities to assume.

When in need of flour, feed, bran and shorts buy ours, and you will get the best. Our feed mill does good grinding.

TRIAL OF HAMILTON

TAKING OF EVIDENCE IN THE MURDER CASE BEGUN.

Duluth Decision Affecting the State Labor Law—Destructive Fire at St. Cloud—Northern Pacific and Burlington to Amalgamate—Auditor Dunn After Timber Thieves—State News in General.

Minneapolis, Feb. 12.—The trial of Frank H. Hamilton, the reporter, for the murder of Leonard R. Day began in earnest during the morning with the formal presentation of the case to the jury by County Attorney Fred H. Boardman. Mr. Boardman in a speech of about half an hour's length outlined what he expected to prove with reference to the prisoner's connection with the death of Day by stabbing in the billiard room of the West hotel at an early hour on the morning of Nov. 25 last. The court room was packed with a curious crowd.

AFFECTS LABOR LAW.

Proprietors Not Responsible for the Acts of Their Agents.

[illegible] Feb. 9.—The trial of Panton & White, department store proprietors, who were arrested on complaint of [illegible] Inspector McCallum, charged with violating the state labor laws by employing Willie Perry, a boy under 14 years of age, without a certificate from the board of education, came to a sudden end in the police court by an order from Judge Edson, dismissing the case before it reached the jury. The decision was based on the ground that a firm could not be bound by the acts of its agent in a criminal proceeding. The judge held that, although it was apparent the law had been violated, the state had failed to show that either Mr. Panton or Mr. White was connected with it, because their manager, Mr. Brown, employed the boy, and he alone was responsible.

RAILWAY DEALS ANNOUNCED.

Northern Pacific and Burlington to Amalgamate.

St. Paul, Feb. 12.—The surprising announcement is made here by a high official of the Northern Pacific that that road is to be amalgamated with the Burlington, which accounts for the mysterious heavy buying of Burlington stock in Wall street of late.

James J. Hill and his Great Northern, it is added, will not be in the deal. The present visit of President Mellen of the Northern Pacific to New York is said to be in connection with this great scheme. The Northern Pacific and the Burlington have long used 700 miles of trackage in common. The Burlington now hauls the Northern Pacific cars from Kansas City to Billings, Mon., and the Northern Pacific hauls Burlington cars from Billings to the Pacific coast.

It is also learned that the plan contemplates the amalgamation of the two as a matter of economy in operation and to obviate the necessity of building several hundred miles of road to parallel the Northern Pacific, a proposition that has been under consideration for three years, but which has been settled by the directors.

Hill; the McDonald & Cook livery stable, a three-story brick structure, and the old postoffice building, an empty frame structure next to the West hotel, owned by O. S. Doyle.

THEIR ARREST ORDERED.

Minnesota State Auditor After Timber Thieves.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—State Auditor Dunn has resolved to begin criminal proceedings against trespassers upon state lands. The arrest has been ordered in Aitkin county of several offenders who persist in taking timber from these lands.

Heretofore the rule has been to confiscate such timber wherever discovered, and to exact a punitive price before releasing the timber. But Mr. Dunn has found this plan insufficient to discourage the trespassers. He will therefore attempt an enforcement of the state law, which provides that a trespasser upon state lands shall be fined not less than $1,000 or imprisoned two years. Either or both penalties may be enforced.

The trespassers are usually the agents of small lumber firms. The big concerns, aware of their responsibility, do not wish to take any chances of punishment under the severe law.

Kidnapping Bill Passed.

St. Paul, Feb. 5.—The lower house of the Minnesota legislature, in a 20-minute session passed the Sweet kidnapping bill, which was introduced during the first week of the term. The measure, it is supposed, will have no trouble getting through the upper house, as it seems to have met with general favor thus far from all quarters. An anti-trust memorial to congress was also passed.

papers here and by that man there," pointing to the innkeeper, "that your mother of lamented memory gave birth to twins. One is yourself; the other was spirited away at the request of your mother. We shall pass over her reasons. It was all due to the efforts of this clever journalist here"—Gretchen was compelled to look at me now, while the king frowned and the prince smiled—"that your sister has been found."

Gretchen gave a cry and started to go to Phyllis with outstretched arms, but as Phyllis stood motionless she stopped, and her arms fell.

"Your highness," said the king to Phyllis, "it is your sister, the Princess Hildegarde. Embrace her, I beg you."

The king willed it. But it occurred to me that there was a warmth lacking in the embrace. Gretchen lightly brushed with her lips the cheek of her sister, and the kiss was as lightly returned. There was something about it all we men failed to understand.

"Moreover," said the king, "she desires you to remain the sovereign Princess of Hohenphalia."

"Nay, your majesty," said Gretchen; "it is I who will relinquish my claims. Your majesty is aware that I have many caprices."

"Indeed, yes," said the king. "And I can assure you that they have caused me no small anxiety. But let us come to an understanding once and for all. Do you wish to abdicate in favor of your sister?"

Gretchen gave me the briefest notice.

"Yes, your majesty."

Phyllis was regarding me steadfastly.

"This is final?" said the king.

"It is."

"And what is your will?" to Phyllis. "Yes; the likeness is truly remarkable," communing aloud to his thought.

I could not suppress the appeal in my eyes.

"Your majesty," said Phyllis, "if my sister will teach me how to become a princess I promise to accept the responsibility."

"You will not need much teaching," replied the king admiringly.

"You will do this—you, my sister?" asked Gretchen eagerly.

"Yes." There was no color now in Phyllis' cheeks. They were as white as the marble faun on the mantel.

"Remember, your highness," said the king, speaking to Gretchen, "there shall be no recall."

"Sire," said the prince, rising, "I request a favor."

"And it shall be granted," said the king, "this being your wedding day."

It was Gretchen who now paled. The hands of the innkeeper closed. I clutched the chair, for my legs trembled. To lose after all!

Gretchen gave a cry and started to go to Phyllis with outstretched arms.

"Ah," said the prince, "I thank your majesty. The favor I ask is that you will postpone this marriage—indefinitely."

"What!" cried the king. He was amazed. "Have I heard you aright, or do my ears play me false?"

"It is true. I thank your majesty again," said the prince, bowing.

"But this is beyond belief," cried the king in anger. "I do not understand. This marriage was at your own request and now you withdraw. Since when," proudly, "was the hand of the Princess Hildegarde to be ignored?"

"It is a delicate matter," said the prince, turning the ring on his finger. "It would be impolite to state my reasons before her highness. Your highness, are you not of my opinion that as matters now stand a marriage between us would be rather absurd?"

"Now, as at all times," retorted Gretchen scornfully. "It has never been my will," a furtive glance at the king.

"But"— began the king. He was wrathful.

"Your majesty," said the innkeeper, "you are a great king; be a generous one."

All looked at him as though they expected to see the king fly at him and demolish him—all but I. The king walked up to the bold speaker, took his measure, then, with his hands clasped behind his back, resumed his pacing. After awhile he came to a standstill.

"Your highness," he said to Phyllis, "what shall I do with this man who has so grossly wronged you?"

"Forgive him."

The king passed on. I was not looking at him, but at the innkeeper. I saw his lip tremble and his eyes fill. Suddenly he fell upon his knees before Phyllis and raised her hand to his lips.

"Will your highness forgive a sinner who only now realizes the wrong he has done to you?"

"Yes, I forgive you," said Phyllis. "The only wrong you have done to me is to have made me a princess. Your majesty will forgive me, but it is all so strange to me who have grown up in a foreign land which is dearer to my heart than the land in which I was born."

I felt a thrill of pride, and I saw that Mr. Wentworth's lips had formed into a "God bless her!"

"It is a question now," said the king, "only of duty."

"And your majesty's will regarding my marriage?" put in the prince, holding his watch in his hand. It was 10 o'clock.

"Well, well! It shall be as you desire!" Then to me: "I thank you in the name of their highnesses for your services. And you, Mr. Wentworth, shall always have the good will of the king for presenting to his court so accomplished and beautiful a woman as her highness the Princess Elizabeth. Hermann Brenner, return to your inn and remain there. Your countenance brings back disagreeable recollections. I shall expect your highnesses at dinner this evening. Prince, I leave to you the pleasant task of annulling your nuptial preparations. Good morning. Ah, these women!" as he passed from the room. "They are our mothers, so we must suffer their caprices."

And as we men followed him we saw Gretchen weeping silently on Phyllis' shoulder.

The innkeeper touched the prince.

"I give you fair warning," he said. "If our paths cross again, one of us shall go on alone."

"I should be very lonely without you," laughed the prince. "However, rest yourself. As the king remarked, your face recalls unpleasant memories. Our paths shall not cross again."

When the innkeeper and the chancellor were out of earshot, I said, "She is mine!"

"Not yet," the prince said softly. "On Tuesday morn I shall kill you."

CHAPTER XXII.

I was very unhappy. Three days passed, and I saw neither Phyllis nor Gretchen. The city was still talking about the dramatic ending of Prince Ernst's engagement to the Princess Hildegarde. Twice I had called at the Hohenphalian residence to pay my respects. Once I was told that their highnesses were at the palace. The second time I was informed that their highnesses were indisposed. I became gloomy and disheartened. I could not understand. Gretchen had not even thanked me for my efforts in saving her the unhappiness of marrying the prince. And Phyllis, she who had called me "Jack," she whom I had watched grow from girlhood to womanhood, she, too, had forsaken me. I do not know what would have become of me but for Pembroke's cheerfulness.

Monday night I was sitting before the grate reading for the hundredth time Gretchen's only letter. Pembroke was buried behind the covers of a magazine. Suddenly a yellow flame leaped from a pine log, and in it I seemed to read all. Gretchen was proud and jealous. She believed that I loved Phyllis and had made her a princess because I loved her. It was the first time I had laughed in many an hour. Pembroke looked over his magazine.

"That sounds good. What caused it?"

"A story," I answered. "Some day I shall tell you all about it. If you will excuse me, cousin mine, I'll make a call on her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde."

Just then the door opened and Pembroke's valet came in. He handed a card to me, and I read upon it, "Count von Walden." I cast it into Pembroke's lap.

"That's the man. He is the inseparable of the Prince of Wortumborg." Then to the valet, "Show him up."

The count gravely passed over the threshold.

"Good evening," he said, with a look of inquiry at Pembroke.

"This gentleman," said I as I introduced him, "will second me in the affair tomorrow morning. I suppose you have come to make the final arrangements?"

"Pardon me," began Pembroke, "but I do not understand"—

"Oh, I forgot! You are," I responded, "to be my second in a duel tomorrow morning. Should anything happen to me it were well to have a friend near by, better still a relative. Well, count?"

"The prince desires me to inform you that he has selected pistols at your request, and despite the fact that he has only the use of his left hand he permits you to use either of yours. There will be one shot each, the firing to be drawn for on the grounds. The time is 6, the place one mile out on the north road in the rear of the Strassburg Inn. I trust this is entirely satisfactory to you?"

"It is," I answered.

"Then allow me to bid you good night." He bowed and backed toward the door. He remained a moment with his hand on the knob, gazing into my eyes. I read in his a mixture of amusement and curiosity. "Good night." And he was gone.

Pembroke stared at me in bewilderment. "What the devil"—

"It is a matter of long standing," said I.

"But a duel!" he cried impatiently. "Hang me if I'll be your second or let you fight! These are not the days of Richelieu. It is pure murder. It is against the law."

"But I cannot draw back honorably," I said. "I cannot."

"I'll notify the police and have them stop it," he said, with determination.

"And have us all arrested and laughed at from one end of the continent to the other. My dear cousin, that man shot the dearest friend I had in the world. I am going to try to kill him at the risk of getting killed myself. He has also insulted the noblest woman that ever lived. If I backed down, I should be called a coward. The people who respect me now would close their doors in my face."

"But you have everything to lose, and he has nothing to gain."

"It cannot be helped," said I. "The woman I love once fought a duel for me. I cannot do less for her. You will be my second?"

"Yes. But if he wounds you woe to him."

"Very well. I'll leave you," said I.

It was not far to the residence of their highnesses, so I walked.

The liveried footman took my card.

"Present it to her highness the Princess Hildegarde," I said as I passed in to the hall.

"Her serene highness has left town, I believe, your excellency. Her serene highness the Princess Elizabeth is dining at the palace."

"Gone?" said I.

"Yes, your excellency." He examined my card closely. "Ah, allow me to deliver this note to you, which her serene highness directed me to do should you call."

It was Phyllis.

My hands shook as I accepted the missive, and the lights began to waver. I passed out into the cold air. Gone? And why? I walked back to the rooms in feverish haste. Pembroke was still at his reading.

"Hello! What brings you back so soon?"

"She was not at home," I answered. I threw my coat and hat on the sofa. I balanced the envelope in my hand. I drew forth the contents and read it.

> Herr Winthrop—Forgive the indiscretion of a princess. On my honor I am sorry for having made you believe that you inspired me with the grand passion. Fully finds plenty to do with idle minds. It was a caprice of mine which I heartily regret. There is nothing to forgive; there is much to forget. However, I am under great obligations to you. I am positive that I shall love my sister as I have never loved a human being before. She is adorable, and I can well comprehend why you should love her deeply. Forgive me for playing with what the French call your summer affections. I am about to leave for Hohenphalia to prepare the way for the new sovereign. Will you kindly destroy that one indiscreet letter which I, in the spirit of mischief, wrote you last autumn?
> THE PRINCESS HILDEGARDE.

The envelope reminded me of a rusty scabbard; there was a very keen weapon within. I lit my pipe and puffed for awhile.

"Cousin," said I, "I have a premonition that I shall not kill Prince Ernst of Wortumborg at 6 o'clock tomorrow morning."

"What put that into your head? You are not going to back down after all, are you?"

"Decidedly not. Something strikes me that I shall miss fire."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Pembroke. "I have been thinking it over, and I've come to the conclusion that it would not be a bad plan to rid this world of a man like your prince. It'll all come out right in the end. You will wed the Princess Hildegarde just as sure as—as I will not wed her sister." He spoke the last words rapidly, as though afraid of them.

"I shall never marry the Princess Hildegarde," said I. "She has gone."

"Gone? Where?"

"It matters not where. Suffice it is that she has gone. Pembroke, you and I were very unfortunate fellows. What earthly use have princesses for you and me? The little knowledge of court we have was got out of cheap books and newspaper articles. To talk with kings and princesses it requires an innate etiquette which commoners cannot learn. We are not to the manner born. These princesses are but candles, and now that we have singed our mothy wings and are crippled so that we may not fly again let us beware. This may or may not be my last night on earth. Let us go to the opera. Let us be original in all things. I shall pay a prima donna to sing my requiem from the footlights before I am dead."

"Jack!" cried Pembroke anxiously.

"Oh, do not worry!" said I. "I am only trying to laugh, but I can't."

"Are you truly serious about going to the opera?" he asked.

"Yes. Hurry and dress," said I.

So we went to the opera. They are full of wonderful scenes, these continental opera houses. Here and there one sees the brilliant uniforms, blue and scarlet and brown, glittering with insignias and softened by furs. Old men with sashes crossing the white bosoms of their linen dominate the boxes, and the beauty of woman is often lost in the sparkle of jewels. And hovering over all is an oppressive fragrance. Pembroke's glasses were roving about. Presently he touched my arm.

"In the upper proscenium," he said.

It was Phyllis. The chancellor and the Grand Duke of S—— were with her.

"We shall visit her during the first intermission," said I.

"You had better go alone," replied Pembroke. "I haven't the courage."

The moment the curtain dropped I left the stall. I passed along the corridor and soon stood outside the box in which Phyllis sat. I knocked gently.

"Enter!" said a soft voice.

"Ah," said the chancellor, smiling as he saw me. "Duke, I believe their majesties are looking this way. Let us go to them. I am pleased to see you, Herr Winthrop. Duke, this is the gentleman who has turned us all upside down."

The duke bowed, and the two left me alone with Phyllis.

There was an embarrassing silence, but she surmounted it.

"Why have you not been to see me?" she asked. "Are you done with me now that you have made me a princess?"

"I did call, but was told that you were indisposed," said I.

"It was because I did not see your card. I shall never be indisposed to my friends—the old ones. However, they will be crowding in here shortly. Will you come and see me at 4 tomorrow afternoon?"

"Is it important?" I was thinking of the duel when I said this.

"Very—to you. You have a strange funereal expression for a man who is about to wed the woman he loves."

"Your sister has left town?" not knowing what else to say.

"Only for a few days. At least so she told me. Have you seen her?"

"No, I have not. A princess!" dropping into a lighter tone. "You carry your honors well. It was to be expected of you. I might have made you a queen, but that would not have changed you any."

"Thank you. Do you know, a title is a most wonderful drawing apparatus? Since Thursday it has been a continued performance of presentations. And I care absolutely nothing for it all. Indeed, it rests heavily upon me. I am no longer free. Ah, Jack, and to think that I must blame you! I have been longing all the evening for the little garden at home. Yes, it will always be home to me. I am almost an alien. I would rather sell lemonade to poor reporters who had only 25 cent pieces in their pockets than queen it over a people that do not interest me and with whom I have nothing in common." She smiled, rather sadly, I thought, at the remembrance of that garden scene so long ago.

"Time has a cruel way of moving us around," said I, snapping the clasps on my gloves and pulling the fingers and looking everywhere but at her. I was wondering if I should ever see her again. "When is the coronation to take place?"

"In June. The king does not wish to hurry me. You see, I must learn to be a princess first. It was kind of him. And you will be at Hohenphalia to witness the event?"

"If nothing happens. We live in a continual uncertainty."

She regarded me somewhat strangely.

"Is there a significance in that last sentence?"

"No," I answered. I felt compelled to add something. "But here come some of your new admirers. Their glittering medals will make me feel out of place if I remain. I shall do my best to accept your invitation."

"Jack, you are hiding something from me. Are you going to leave the city to search for her?"

"No," said I. "The truth is," with a miserable attempt to smile, "I have an engagement tomorrow morning, and it is impossible to tell how long it will last. Good night."

Fate played loose with me that night. As I was turning down the corridor I ran into the prince. He was accompanied by Von Wahlen and an attache whom I knew.

"Good evening," said the prince. "Do you not prefer the French opera, after all?"

"All good music is the same to me," I answered, calmly returning his amused look with a contemptuous one. "Wagner, Verdi, Gounod or Bizet, it matters not."

"Till we meet again," he said as I continued on. "Shall I add pleasant dreams?"

"I am obliged to you," I answered over my shoulder, "but I never have them. I sleep too soundly."

"Cousin," said I later, "what was that opera?"

"I forgot to bring along a programme," said Pembroke.

CHAPTER XXIII.

When Pembroke and I arrived at the Strassburg Inn, on the north road, neither the prince nor Von Walden was in evidence. I stepped from our carriage and gazed interestedly around me. The scene was a picturesque one. The sun, but half risen, was of a rusty brass, and all east was mottled with purple and salmon hues. The clearing, a quarter of a mile away, where the prince and I were to settle our dispute, was hidden under a fine white snow, and the barren trees which encircled it stood out blackly. Pembroke looked at his watch.

"They ought to be along soon. It's five after 6. How do you feel?" regarding me seriously.

"As nerveless as a rod of steel," I answered. "Let us go in and order a small breakfast. I'm a bit cold."

"Better let it go at a cup of coffee," he suggested.

"It will be more consistent, that is true," I said. "Coffee and pistols for two."

"I'm glad to see that you are bright," said Pembroke. "Hold out your hand."

I did so.

"Good. So long as it doesn't tremble I have confidence of the end."

We had scarcely finished our coffee

THE REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON AND HIS WORLD FAMOUS STORIES.

Career of the Author of "Robert Hardy's Seven Days," "In His Steps" and "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong"—His Attempt to Run a Newspaper as Jesus Would.

Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, whose attempt to run a Topeka newspaper as Christ would, has attracted widespread attention and is a most interesting personality. He might be preaching to great audiences in a rich church, he might be making an immense fortune simply by collecting royalties on books whose editions run into the millions of copies, or he might be on the lecture platform receiving the plaudits of the people of great cities, but he is content to remain pastor of a modest church in Topeka and do his work as he did it before his name became known in many lands.

Here is the story of his career: He was born in Wellsville, N. Y., in 1857. While he was still a very small boy his parents removed to Dakota. His father was a minister who farmed weekdays and preached in a little church on Sunday. The Sheldon farm was just outside of Yankton, and there the man who was to write "Robert Hardy's Seven Days," "In His Steps" and "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong" spent most of his boyhood. It was farm work which built up the broad shoulders and developed the muscular limbs of the man who has become the foremost of religious authors.

As a boy Mr. Sheldon went to school in Yankton. Even at that time he had begun to write stories. They were printed in the local paper, some of them. "And they were just as good," says his father, "as those he writes now."

As his father was anxious for him to become a minister, the young man went east and entered Phillips academy, Andover, Mass., where thousands of theological students are trained. Later he took a course at Brown university and then returned to the Andover Theological seminary.

After a summer in Europe he entered the ministry and began preaching in Waterbury, Vt. But the spirit of the west was in him, so when he received a call to become the pastor of the newly established Central Congregational church, in Topeka, in 1888, he gladly accepted it as the opening he had been waiting for.

Most men would not have thought the outlook an inviting one. The little congregation of 60 had no church building, but held services in a dingy little hall over a grocery store. But he went to work with a will. As a result of his energetic methods the little hall was soon abandoned and a substantial stone church erected. The congregation was increased to 300. It was not a rich or fashionable congregation, nor is it today, but it is very much alive.

Early in his pastorate Mr. Sheldon began to employ strikingly original methods. He was not satisfied with the kind of work usually done by ministers. He wanted to know what ideas the masses of the people had on the subject of Christianity, and he wanted to find out about their daily lives and occupations.

With this desire in his heart he asked his congregation to excuse him from pastoral work for three months, and his congregation saw little of him except during church services. He was at home scarcely any of the time, but very few people knew what he was doing. It was characteristic of the man. He was "getting acquainted."

Topeka is the headquarters of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad. Hundreds of men are employed in the railroad shops, and hundreds of trainmen make their headquarters there. It was among these that Mr. Sheldon spent much of his time.

He obtained an employe's pass from the railroad company, and, dressed as an employee, he made trips up and down the road in company with the trainmen, learning their ways and drawing out their ideas on every conceivable subject, especially on religion.

After that he spent a week or two with the physicians of Topeka, studying them. He read their books and visited their patients with them. Another week was spent with the lawyers in their offices and in court.

In the hard times of 1893 Mr. Sheldon received many applications for aid from persons who were out of employment. He determined to find out for himself whether or not employment could be secured by a common laborer, and, putting on a suit of clothes, he started out in search of it. Every one who ever employed labor received a call from him, but he was invariably turned away with the information that no laborers were needed. On the following Sunday he related his experiences, and the people of Topeka awoke to the fact that an unusual sort of preacher was among them.

Then he wrote his stories—those which preceded "In His Steps"—and read them from the pulpit, one installment at a time, instead of delivering sermons. He interested his congregation in his plan to regenerate "Tennesseetown," one of the squalid suburbs of Topeka.

Such is the outline of the career which has brought him fame. He is a hard worker and lives modestly. He has a wife and one child, a boy of 2 years. His father also lives near him in Topeka and helps him with his work.

Although Mr. Sheldon has written a dozen books, he is known best as the author of "In His Steps." The work was not copyrighted in England, and 20 publishing houses there are still issuing editions. It has been translated into French, German, Russian, Italian, Armenian, Swedish, Norwegian, Spanish and dialects of western Africa. Mr. Sheldon is by nature a retiring man and almost dreads notoriety. When told that the people who read his books would like to know about the author, he said: "That is mere idle curiosity. I do not wish to be talked about or to have my church work talked about. The message I have for these people among whom I live I give in my sermons. The message I have for the world at large I give in my books. I have nothing more to say."

Although he avoids notoriety, he is willing to speak when an opportunity presents itself to further the cause of religion or humanity. He believes in municipal ownership of public utilities and has studied the subject at home and abroad. He affiliates with no political party, but in local campaigns has made speeches in favor of public ownership. He believes that water, heat and light plants, together with street car lines, should be operated by cities.

SEED WHEAT

We have selected some very choice seed wheat, that we will sell or exchange. We have both pure Scotch Fife and Blue Stem, and it is free from all foul seed, cleaned ready for a seeder. This wheat was raised in the bottom lands near the Red River of the North, and is about as fine a sample of wheat as we have ever seen. We have tested samples of the wheat that has been damaged by rain and find that about only forty of fifty per cent of it will grow, and when it does grow it makes a very puny and inferior straw. As a matter of fact there are very few farmers who appreciate the value of a change of seed. They will go on year after year seeding the old, run out, cockly seed, when a good strong seed gives them from 2 to 3 bushels per acre more and it does not cost any more to plow, harrow, seed or harvest, and they would have a good seed wheat of their own the following year. Sample of this seed wheat can be seen at our office or at the Crompe Elevator.

(Signed) ADAM ZEH,

[SEAL]

DISTRICT COURT,

JOSEPH PERRAULT,
Clerk District Court.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,

County of Red Lake—ss

I, Adam Zeh, Auditor of said County, do hereby certify that the foregoing copy of the list of real estate taxes delinquent on the first Monday in January, A. D. 1901, hereto attached, was this day received from the Clerk of the District Court in and for said County of Red Lake.

Witness my hand and official seal this 4th day of February, A. D. 1901.

ADAM ZEH,
County Auditor, Red Lake County, Minn.

Steamed Nut Pudding.

To half a cup of granulated sugar add one gill of melted butter. When well blended, add two beaten eggs and one cup of milk. Mix two teaspoonfuls of baking powder with two cups of flour and add to the other ingredients. Sprinkle a saltspoonful of salt over 1½ cups of any kind of nut meats broken into bits and add them to the mixture. Butter a mold or pudding dish, turn the mixture in and steam three hours. Serve with wine sauce.

Popcorn Candy.

Having popped the corn nicely, salt it and sift it through the fingers, that the extra salt and the unpopped corn may escape. Have ready some candy, made by cooking together one pound of molasses, one-half pound brown sugar, one tablespoonful of vinegar and from 1½ to 2 ounces of fresh butter. When this is all hot ready, stir into it as much of the popcorn as it will take up; then turn it out on to buttered or oiled dishes or shape it into balls.

VANITY'S VISIONS.

IN EVENING GOWNS, LUXURIOUS WRAPS AND SMALL ACCESSORIES.

Girl's Ball Gown—Three-quarter Sealskin Coat and Eton Jacket In Broadtail—Crepe de Chine Popular. A Glory of Gold.

The popularity of the plain short coat in the midst of so much that is ornate and heavily garnished is in part accounted for by the fact that it accommodates the fur collarettes and boas nicely, and these are quickly thrown off when one enters a warm room and the jacket is thrown open, whereas the removal and redonning of a large fur trimmed wrap are affairs of which one thinks twice. However, the truly luxurious woman must have her heavy furs, and a better example of all that is delicious in this line would be far to seek than a three-quarter sealskin coat of today; for instance, one with the new rolled collar, lined with sable, immense soft revers of sable, scalloped bell shaped sleeves and handsome large tortoise shell buttons. Less imposing but equally stylish is an Eton jacket of black broadtail with great revers and collar of white broadtail and broadtail muff to match.

DEBUTANTE'S BALL GOWN.

It is to evening styles that the magic fashion draws us most irresistibly just at this season, for among all vanity's visions are no greater dreams of delight than the confections for the fair young girls whose debut society is now celebrating. One of these appears in the cut—a fascinating first ball gown of net with choux of illusion and pale pink wild roses with dark glossy foliage and garlands of flowers serving as epaulets, while the actual sleeves are in one with the draped bertha. A girdle and ribbon of pale pink satin complete the corsage.

Crepe de chine is the popular evening gown material in soft shades of blue, pink, cream, etc., and very charming is a confection of pale blue crape and silver embroidery.

FASHIONABLE FURS.

Although it smacks of repetition to mention gold, such mention is imperative, for gold continues to be the glory of the toilet.

One seam in front and one in the middle of the back mark the newest skirt model.

A welcome revival reported is that of "pinked out" taffeta ruchings among stylish trimmings for gowns in gauze fabrics.

Vegetables Rechauffes.

Cold vegetables, such as peas, beans, asparagus, Brussels sprouts, cauliflowers, etc., can all be warmed up and served a la maitre d'hotel by tossing them in butter over a moderate fire, with a sprinkling of chopped parsley, pepper and salt and the squeeze of a lemon. Boiled potatoes are best served cut in slices and fried as pommes de terre sautees.

Scalloped Turkey.

One of the ways to manage the "left over" portions of the noble bird now in season is as follows: In a buttered baking dish, lined with crumbs, put alternate layers of half inch bits of cold turkey, stuffing and gravy (or white sauce and crumbs, if there be no stuffing and gravy), cover with crumbs and bake 15 minutes.

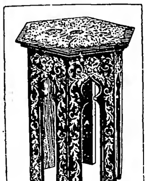
ART OF PYROGRAPHY

A VERSATILE DECORATION CAPABLE OF MANY APPLICATIONS.

The Necessary Instruments, Including Platinum Points, and How to Use Them—Preliminary Practice. Taboret In Poker Work.

The variety of uses to which pyrography may be applied is endless. It lends itself especially to the broad treatment of large surfaces, but it can also be used in the adornment of the most dainty articles by delicate lines and soft shadings, says a Good Housekeeping writer in preface to the following practical instructions:

The iron style of earlier days has been replaced by a point of platinum. Platinum is used for poker work, because it is the only metal that will absorb the gas of the naphtha by which the supply of heat is sustained. The complete outfit consists of platinum points, a cork covered handle, a length of rubber tubing, a naphtha bottle provided with connections for tubing, a spirit lamp and a rubber bulb with tubing attached. It is also necessary to have some alcohol and naphtha. Be sure to have the naphtha bottle tightly corked and never open it in a room where there is a light or the smallest spark of fire, as it is very inflammable. The alcohol also should be handled with care. To do a variety of poker work an outfit of several points is necessary, but it is well for the beginner to have at least two, as illustrated in Figs. c and d. The first of these, c, is the more important, as with it both outlining and shading can be done, but the second is better for backgrounds.

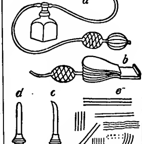


DECORATED TABORET.

Before attempting a design the beginner should practice on a smooth pine board or a piece of whitewood, which is better, as the finer grain makes practice easier. To light the point put some cotton wool in the naphtha bottle and fill the bottle about one-third full of naphtha. Connect the bottle with the cork handle and with the bulb by the rubber tubing, hold the point in the flame of the spirit lamp until it is thoroughly heated and blow gently by pressing the bulb until the point becomes redhot. The point may now be withdrawn from the flame, and its heat can be kept up and regulated by the pressure on the bulb, which forces the vapor of the naphtha through the tubing into the point, where it burns. The lamp may now be extinguished. The object of the cotton wool in the bottle is to give more evaporating surface. Fig. a shows the apparatus. Sometimes a foot bellows (Fig. b) is used instead of the hand bellows. This is less tiresome and gives the operator both hands for work.

Now grasp the cork handle, not too near the hot point, and try to make true, even lines on the pine board. This at first is very difficult, for an instant's delay in the touch of the point will make a hole or deep dot in the wood, and the line will resemble a smudge. To overcome this first trouble bring the point upon the board with a sweep of the hand and lift it off in the same way. Keep this sweep as even and light as possible until you have a firm, clean line. The beginner will succeed more easily if the point is not too hot.

Try different lines as you would learn to shade with a lead pencil. Make parallel lines, long and short, broad and narrow, even and graded, straight and curved, as shown in Fig. e.



INSTRUMENTS USED IN THE ART

Designs are to be used in the following manner. Draw them on the wood and burn in firmly and lightly. A quick mode is to trace the design on a piece of tracing paper and then transfer it to the wood by means of impression paper, then burn as described.

Opera cloaks are now almost smothered in chiffon, lisse or mousseline de sole. Ermine and sable mink are the most fashionable furs, and mink is quite charming on strawberry and pastel blues or heliotrope.

A CAREER ....BY.... ACCIDENT

By HOWARD FIELDING.

Copyright, 1900,
By CHARLES W. HOOKE.

Jane Lestrell is a name that one hears with increasing frequency. The lady has achieved something that may almost be called fame, though she is not yet 24.

I happen to know that her success is due to a singular chance, and as the revelation of this fact may please the envious and will not worry Jane in the least it is here set forth.

At the age of 20, when Jane found that she would have to make a living, she turned naturally to literature. So many people do. Jane had written (uncompleted) romances in blank books with black covers and had once sold a poem to a comic weekly for the generous sum of $2. She felt that she had the gift.

It chanced that she enjoyed the acquaintance of an estimable old maid—Miss Prudence Whistler—who earned $20 a week as a reader of manuscripts for a publishing firm, and with this lady she found a haven when dependence upon her dead father's relatives became no longer tolerable.

Miss Whistler occupied quaint apartments in a building that harbored a salesroom for secondhand pianos on the ground floor and a strange collection of artistic people—most of them damaged by wear, like the pianos—in the rooms above.

Her friend was away all the day, and Jane sat alone with the muses. Permit me to say, out of the fullness of my heart, that these mythical ladies are very distressing company. Moreover, Prudence Whistler's little parlor was furnished in a style to wear upon the spirits of youth. The chairs and the sofa had come from the ancestral home. They were stiff and straight and upholstered in haircloth. The center table was a strange thing, long and black. Jane thought it must have served an undertaker as a rest for coffins. The pictures were not bad, being mostly details reproduced from famous paintings—faces and figures expressing woe.

The condition of Jane's nerves after a month in this place was such that if any one who suddenly dropped a feather pillow behind her she would have jumped right up through the ceiling into the studio of Diomed Guerin, the animal painter.

It may be that this state of the nervous system is favorable to literary work; I have heard that theory advocated. On the other hand, there is unquestionably a fatality in first stories similar to the so called "beginner's luck" that lures men into the vice of gambling. Let philosophy wrestle with the explanation while history records the fact that Miss Lestrell sold her first story without any trouble at all and received $25 for it.

"Don't lose your head, my dear," said the experienced Miss Whistler. "It may be 97 years before you sell another one."

Jane did not put any faith in this gloomy prophecy, and she went to work upon her second romance with high hope and fierce determination. But she was nervous, as I have already remarked, and her condition was aggravated by the performances of a gentleman named Franz Reinhardt, whose studio of music was directly beneath Miss Whistler's abode.

The tenants in this building knew little of one another, yet there was a rather definite rumor that Reinhardt was an excellent musician in exceptionally hard luck. It was said that he accepted pupils at the absurd rate of 50 cents an hour, and that most of them never paid him.

Jane, who was very fond of music, believed, during the first days of her residence there, that she should enjoy hearing Reinhardt and his pupils sing. There was a register in the wall—a relic of the days when the building had been a private residence heated by a furnace—and it admitted sounds from the studio of music with remarkable distinctness. They did not annoy Jane in the least until she began to be bothered with that second story, and then she suddenly awoke to the fact that Reinhardt sang only one song—"Palm Branches"—and drilled all his pupils—men, women and children—in one single vocal exercise.

Every morning at 9 precisely he would put himself into condition for the day's labors by singing "Palm Branches" four times, using the Italian words, which he pronounced with a strong German accent. "Palm Branches" is a beautiful hymn of praise, but enough of it is enough. It became so familiar in Miss Whistler's apartment that the lady's canary bird used to sing it. The top of the long black table echoed it like a sounding board, and the legs of the haircloth chairs danced solemnly in perfect time.

It rang in Jane's head until she simply had to sing it. There was no other way to get it out of her mind. In the earlier days she would hum it gently. Later, when the habit had grown upon her, she found no relief except by singing it right out at the top of her voice. At first she was afraid that Mr. Reinhardt would hear her and take offense, but afterward she was afraid that he wouldn't.

She found herself imitating his vocal methods. It was mimicry, and it was very rude, but she absolutely could not help it. When the professor was drilling that song into one of his pupils and Jane was struggling with her story, she would find nothing in her mind at last but "Palm Branches," and only by singing it once, good and strong, could she get into condition to resume her work.

It was nearly as bad with the vocal exercise. In fact, after a time it was in one respect worse, for she began to associate it with a particular individual of whom she knew nothing except that he had a voice like 50 mad bulls. He was a diligent person, with plenty of leisure, for he came almost every afternoon and usually remained about two hours. He devoted himself entirely to the vocal exercise, and he always made precisely the same mistake in it.

That is very harrowing to the nerves of the listener. One must have an iron constitution to stand it.

"If he makes that mistake again today," Jane would say to herself, "I shall certainly go down stairs and beat his brains out. No, no; he can't have any! He's done it again for the forty millionth time! Oh, you idiot!"

Then she would sing the exercise herself, sometimes with her head out of the window, for politeness' sake, sometimes defiantly, desperately. And one day, when the story was particularly annoying and the roaring basso more stupid than usual, she went in a frenzy directly to the register and yelled that vocal exercise into it until the antique, dilapidated furnace far down in the cellar rang like the cymbals in a band.

This really frightened her, not only because it was so very rude, but because it was the final convincing proof that she was going mad. For a month she had suspected it. There could no longer be any doubt. She walked to the black table and tore up all that she had written on her story that day; then she lay down on the fur rug in front of the grate fire and began to cry in a very childish and enjoyable fashion.

She was interrupted by a knock at the door. Such an event was practically unprecedented. In her surprise Jane forgot all about the worries of a literary life and the inconveniences of going crazy. She jumped up from the rug and ran to the looking glass, where she performed those feats of prestidigitation common to her sex under such circumstances. Then she opened the door and beheld a slender and graceful young man, bright eyed and magnetic. He was dressed with elegance and good taste, and his manner appealed at once to Jane, who had no especial liking for earnest, hearty, energetic people.

"I beg your pardon," said he. "May I venture to present my card and ask for just one minute of your time?"

"Won't you come in, Mr. Norton?" said the girl, glancing at the card. "I am Jane Lestrell."

He saluted the mention of her name very gracefully as he stepped into the room.

"This is an attempt," said he, "to make a right of two wrongs. The books say that that can't be done, but I'm not dismayed. I am the fellow who sings so atrociously in Mr. Reinhardt's studio down stairs. Sings? Let me say bellows and be truthful about it. I can't sing any more than a cow, and I know it."

SHE FOUND HERSELF IMITATING HIS VOCAL METHODS.

"I think you have a great voice," said Jane. "I can hardly believe"—

"That I'm not as big as an elephant? I don't wonder you're surprised. But really, I don't pretend to sing; I come here to help out my friend, Mr. Reinhardt. He's a splendid fellow, and he is very poor. I'm sure he's an excellent teacher of singing, but he doesn't have a bit of luck. None of his pupils can sing. I'm the only one that can even make much of a noise. Now, it's really necessary for a teacher to have some pupils that can become known and attract others. Of course I can never do that, but I can pay for my lessons, which is more than most of them can do. You'll pardon me for mentioning it, but I'm quite well off, and Reinhardt won't take a cent from me except in this way. He's such a good fellow! If you knew him, you'd forgive me for annoying you the way I have with my awful howling. And—and that's what I came up here to say."

"Mr. Norton," said Jane, with her face as red as fire, "did you hear me just now?"

"Why, yes," said he. "We heard you singing the exercise. We've heard you before, and you sing it beautifully. Mr. Reinhardt says that you have a voice like all the nightingales in paradise—that's the way he puts it, and the tears come into his eyes every time he mentions you. He says that you could make your everlasting fortune in concert or opera and win a fame that would reach around the world three times and tie in a double bowknot. That was the way he expressed it, very respectfully, but with his peculiar enthusiasm. I wish you could take a course with him."

"I am taking a course with him," responded Jane. "I sing 'Palm Branches' 25 times a day, and I go through that exercise in my sleep—I really do. I wake myself up with it. And now I'm going to say something perfectly absurd, but it's true. My voice has improved! I really have learned Mr. Reinhardt's method without in the least meaning to do so, and I know that I sing a good deal better for it."

"If I should tell him that," said Norton, "he would die of joy."

"Then please don't tell him," she rejoined. "It's hardly honest to get instruction in that way, and I'm quite ashamed of it. But I'm much more ashamed of having been so childish as to let you and him know that the music annoyed me. I have been so very, very nervous"—

And she told him all about her entry into literature and its painful results.

"You almost tempt me," said she in conclusion, "to give up story writing and try to do something with my voice. I have been told once or twice that I sing quite well."

"FRANZ," SAID HE, "SHE'S COMING DOWN."

"Well!" echoed Norton. "Why, Reinhardt swears that the cherubim and seraphim aren't fit to hum an accompaniment when you are singing! Won't you please come down and sing for him just once? I tell you in the calmest possible manner that Reinhardt would be willing to be burned alive the next minute if you would sing the half of one song for him—the shortest one ever written."

"I suppose that is the way he expressed it," said Jane, with a smile. "I begin to perceive where this extravagant language originates. I don't believe that Mr. Reinhardt is so enthusiastic."

Norton laid his hand upon his heart solemnly, while his fine, dark eyes shone with earnestness.

"If you will think of the most terrible and binding pledge ever uttered by man or woman since the world began," said he, "I will vow to you by it that Reinhardt"—

"I will take your simple word," said she, laughing, "and I will sing for Mr. Reinhardt within ten minutes. Will you please prepare him for the ordeal?"

Norton made a graceful exit, and the next moment he burst into his friend's studio.

"Franz," said he, "she's coming down. In one minute you will see what nature was trying to do when she made all the other beautiful women that ever walked the earth. They were mere experiments, Franz, and Miss Lestrell is the first perfect and complete success."

"I am glad she will come," said the blond young German gravely. "She has a good voice, as it sounds through the floor."

Probably Reinhardt's absence of enthusiasm, after Norton's superabundance, piqued Jane somewhat. She is an obstinate girl, with a touch of vanity in her composition. Whatever the cause, she determined to make Reinhardt understand that she really had a voice. So she went to his studio three times a week for many months and worked like a little slave, subsisting meanwhile on the proceeds of a story or two and her own grit.

The result is well known in musical circles. Jane is a full fledged prima donna and Reinhardt is the rage as a teacher. And, incidentally, Mr. Willis Norton has found out what love is—the one thing in this universe that is too big even for his powers of exaggeration. At present his fate is uncertain, but if protestations of devotion can win a woman Norton cannot possibly lose.

A CASE FOR AN EXPERT

By Peter McArthur.

Copyright, 1900, by Peter McArthur.

"Hello!" exclaimed Dr. Bascomb as he entered his office, where Jack Kenly was walking back and forth while waiting for him. "What is the matter? You look worried."

"I am worried," said Kenly as he shook hands. "Have you seen Nellie lately?"

"Not since a week ago Thursday, just before you started on your trip to Cincinnati. Is there anything the matter with her?"

"I can't say for certain, but I am afraid there is. She says herself that she is quite well, but she is so silent and irritable that I am afraid her nerves are out of order."

"Well, I'll drop around and see her some time during the day," said the doctor.

"No; I don't think you had better do that," said the young husband. "She protests that there is nothing the matter, and if you made a professional call it might make her angry and increase her nervousness. But, say, can't you come round and have dinner with us and have a smoke with me afterward? And perhaps you could diagnose her case without her suspecting anything, and then you could prescribe something that would help her."

"All right," said the doctor. "Call for me on your way home, and I'll go along."

Having relieved his mind by making this arrangement, Kenly went to his office and during the afternoon telegraphed to his wife that Dr. Bascomb would be with them to dinner. This was not unusual, for he and the bachelor doctor were old college chums and still retained much of the friendship of their student days. As young Mrs. Kenly had made it a point to make herself agreeable to her husband's old friends, so that he would never feel that he had given up too much of his old life when he married, and as she had developed a warm personal friendship for the young doctor, he usually spent at least one evening a week at their house. So there was nothing in the doctor's visit to excite her suspicion.

While Kenly and the doctor were strolling to the house Kenly talked of his wife's ailment, of which he had thoroughly convinced himself. Like many healthy people, he had an almost morbid dread of illness, and his talk had the effect of making Dr. Bascomb very alert for subtle symptoms, for nervous disorders are so elusive.

To their surprise Mrs. Kenly greeted them at the door with her accustomed liveliness, and when dinner was served was the life of the little party, just as she had always been in the past. Indeed her liveliness seemed greater than usual, for her husband was somewhat silent because he was worried and thought that his friend could diagnose the case better if he kept in the background. The doctor, being professionally alert, ascribed her brightness to the elation that so frequently follows dejection and was working up quite a serious case. After dinner Kenly made the excuse that he had no good cigars in the house and went out to buy some so as to leave the doctor and his wife together.

"How are you feeling these days?" inquired the doctor when they were alone, in a tone that he tried hard to make unprofessional.

"Why, I never felt better in my life."

"That's good. You never even have the blues, do you?"

"Of course, I have the blues sometimes. Who doesn't?"

"Um-m! Never see sparks of fire before your eyes when you turn your head suddenly, do you?"

"See here. Are you putting me through a medical examination? Do you want to feel my pulse and see my tongue?"

"Well, that would do no harm," said the doctor, seizing her wrist and taking out his watch. She snatched her hand away almost angrily.

"No, I am not going to let you feel my pulse, and if you are not careful you may feel my tongue instead of seeing it."

The doctor gravely meditated on these symptoms of irritability, and, noticing his silence, Mrs. Kenly looked at him with some alarm.

"Why, you don't think there is anything the matter with me, do you?"

"Oh, no," said the doctor with professional diplomacy, not wishing to excite his patient; "but you know I always look after the health of my friends even when they are not asking me to."

"But I don't see why you should be paying attention to mine just now when I am simply brutally healthy. Has Jack been talking to you? I remember he said something about my not looking well when he got back." And a momentary frown wrinkled her brow. But the arrival of Jack prevented further talk on the subject of health, and the two men retired to the library to smoke.

"Well?" asked the anxious husband after they had lit their cigars.

"Oh, there is nothing serious," said the young doctor, with a wise look. "Her nerves are certainly strung to high pitch, and I should say that her liver is affected somewhat. She probably worried at being left alone while you were away, and that wore on her."

"But what do you suggest?" asked the husband. "Are you going to prescribe for her?"

"Not medicines. She doesn't realize that there is anything the matter with her, and if I ordered drugs it would only tend to make her worse, for, after all, there is something in the contention of the mental scientists that people are sick when they think they are. It is particularly true of people of a nervous temperament. On the other hand, the fact that she does not realize her condition is dangerous, for she might go on thinking herself quite well until something really serious developed."

"But what can we do?" asked Kenly, now thoroughly alarmed.

"Well, I think a change of scene and lively company, with complete rest, would fix her up all right in a few weeks, and that would be a cure she could take without knowing anything about it except that she was having a good time."

"But I am afraid I can't get away with her just now."

"Of course you can't, but she could go to the seaside somewhere near by, and you could spend your Sundays with her, or she could go to the mountains."

"That's so. I'll suggest it to her tonight, for she seems to be in a better mood than she has been of late."

"Yes," said the doctor, "that is one of the strongest signs of her disordered condition. She seesaws from dejection to elation, and tonight she is up. The necessity of playing the hostess lifted her, and, like all people whose nerves are affected, she drew too heavily on her resources, and for that reason was unnaturally bright."

By the time the conversation had ended Kenly was thoroughly alarmed, and he s[illegible] with fear the liveliness of his [illegible] they returned to the parlor [illegible] played and sang for them. Not wishing to let her exhaust herself the doctor left early.

They were silent for a few minutes after his departure, and Kenly noticed that the animation died from his wife's face and that she had returned to the mood that had alarmed him. But that only spurred him on to do what he considered his duty.

"I have been thinking, my dear," he began, "that you should really go away somewhere for a rest. Lots of people are going away for their holidays just now, and though I can't go yet, I could arrange to spend my Sundays with you."

"A rest!" she exclaimed with unsuspected energy. "Who told you I was tired?"

"Oh, I don't exactly mean a rest, but a holiday, a good time."

"I must say you are getting very thoughtful—of late."

He affected not to notice the ironical intonation of her remark and proceeded:

"Then you will go, won't you? Which would you prefer, the seaside or the mountains?"

Instead of replying she walked up to him and, looking into his face with blazing eyes, said slowly, but intensely:

"JOHN KENLY, I WANT YOU TO TELL ME."

"John Kenly, I want you to tell me why you want to get me out of town."

"Want you to go out of town? You wrong me, my dear. I shall be very lonely without you and will be sorry to have you go away, but I really think you should go."

"Why should I go? I haven't asked for a holiday, and I know we can't afford the expense, and I don't need to go."

Suddenly an idea occurred to her.

"Was it you that put Dr. Bascomb up to trying to scare me about my health? I know it was, and he and you have some scheme in mind and want to get rid of me for awhile."

"Oh, my dear, you do not mean that."

"I mean every word of it, and, what is more, I mean to stay right here until you go for your holidays, and then I'll go with you—to watch you."

"Hush, dear, and we will drop the matter for the present."

"Yes, and for the future too," she replied, for she had a temper of her own that was quite sufficient for all requirements.

Kenly was afraid that he would aggravate the trouble if he continued the argument until she became more exhausted than she was, so he let the matter drop, resolving at the same time to ask Dr. Bascomb if it would not be better to gently break to her the news of her condition and get her to allow herself to be properly treated. In the morning her eyes were red with silent weeping, but she did not choose to take her husband into favor again, so he went gloomily to his office.

On his way home he called on Dr. Bascomb and told of the failure of his prescription.

"Ah!" said the doctor. "That is serious, and now we must break the matter to her. You had better go home and avoid the subject, and I will drop in during the evening, and we will talk things over quietly. My being there will save her a fright, for I can assure her that there is nothing really serious the matter yet."

The plan was agreed to and Kenly went home. His wife met him at the door in an alarming state of excitement. She was half laughing and half crying, and all the while she kept her hand pressed to her throat.

"Why, what is the matter?" he asked, with ill concealed anxiety.

By way of reply she slipped her disengaged arm around him and laughed up at him as she said:

"OH, IT'S ALL RIGHT," SAID KENLY.

"I suspect we have been a couple of geese, and I will confess to you if you will to me."

"What do you mean?"

"If you will confess to me why you wanted me to go out of town, I will confess why I have been so disagreeable to you ever since you came back from the west."

In spite of his agreement with the doctor Kenly saw that he would have an excellent chance to break things gently to her, so he agreed.

"Go ahead," he said. "Though I did not think you were cross."

"Oh, yes, I was, and it was all because I thought you had forgotten my birthday." And she withdrew her hand from her throat and showed the brooch he had ordered sent to the house for her during his absence.

"Your mother sent it to me today and said there had evidently been a mistake. You had absentmindedly given your old address, and, as your name is the same as your father's, the jeweler naturally sent it to your mother. Why didn't you tell me that you had sent it?"

"I thought that if you didn't think it worth speaking about I would say nothing either, and then you were so different from what you usually were that I got alarmed."

"Alarmed?"

"Yes; I thought you were ill, and when Dr. Bascomb was here he diagnosed your case as one of overstrained nerves and liver complaint, and that was why I wanted you to go out of town, so as to get a change and a rest. We thought it would only make you worse to alarm you by saying anything about your condition, but when you objected so positively we decided to tell you, and Dr. Bascomb is coming around to see you tonight."

It may sound undignified, but Mrs Kenly simply shrieked with laughter. At last she gasped:

"Sa—so I have liver complaint, have I, and nerves? Oh, wait until I see him! Why, I was only cool to you and cross because I thought you had forgotten my birthday. But it seems it wasn't enough that we should make fools of ourselves. He had to come in and do the thing scientifically. Oh!"

When Dr. Bascomb came, he found his prospective patient and her foolish looking husband sitting on a sofa in a way that suggested the honeymoon.

"Oh, it is all right," said Kenly. "I have been a doddering idiot, and you"— But his wife's laughter drowned all farther remarks.

"I never knew that family rows were now considered pathologically, doctor. I have a number of friends that are ailing in that way, and I shall take pleasure in recommending you."

The doctor looked from one to the other in helpless amazement. They both seemed to have gone crazy.

"It was just this way," said Kenly. "I was having a row with my wife and didn't know it, and all the symptoms we observed were nothing more or less than ordinary temper."

Then they told him the whole story, and now all Mrs. Kenly's friends think it was just lovely of Dr. Bascomb to send her such a beautiful pair of vases. But they don't know the story she has kept a secret.

TROUBLE IN CAMP

CONGRESSIONAL APPORTIONMENT COMMITTEE IN HOT WATER.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 17.—There is trouble over the apportionment which is being attempted by the committee of the legislature. This committee will attempt to make nine Republican districts out of the seven now existing—a big job on the face of it. In addition to the fact that they have hard work on their hands, charges of favoritism are being made against them. It is openly charged by those who consider McCleary a gubernatorial possibility that an attempt is being made to kill him by changing his district so that it will be impossible for him to carry his own district, which has been so easy for him in the past. It is also said that some of the legislative solons who are anxious to go to congress will attempt to arrange districts for themselves. Prominent Republicans charge that these considerations are outweighing party considerations, and there is no question that there will be a hot fight in the legislature when the committee's report is returned. Several of the Republican members are not backward in stating that things in the committee and among the politicians are not as they should be.

St. Paul, Feb. 17.—The increase of the National Guard is the subject of a bill which has been introduced in the house. This bill provides for a Fourth regiment of infantry and is practically the same regiment that was killed at the session two years ago. It is claimed by its supporters that Minnesota is in need of another regiment of the guard in order to keep up with other states of an equal population.

PASSES SENATE

THE ANTI-CIGARETTE BILL BIDS FAIR TO BECOME A LAW.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 20.—The senate has passed the anti-cigarette bill. The house will probably pass it next week. The bill provides a fine for any one who sells or gives away cigarettes or cigarette paper. The result will be that those who smoke the little paper rolls will be forced to buy their materials outside of the state, for the law is not such that it will prevent the smoking of cigarettes to any great extent.

Millions of people are familiar with DeWitt's Little Early Risers and those who use them find them to be famous little liver pills. Never gripe. W. A. Schreiter.

JOHN LIND PROPOSES TO BECOME EDITOR OF THE ST. PAUL GLOBE.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 20. 1901.—L. R. Rosing, formerly secretary to Governor Lind and chairman of the Democratic state central committee, is about to assume control of the St. Paul Globe. It is announced that Mr. Rosing has secured an option on the property from the owner, said to be James J. Hill, and that he will assume the business management of the paper in the very near future. Mr. Rosing is not yet ready to make any announcement in regard to the paper, but there is no question that he holds the option. It is said on the best of authority that Mr. Rosing has associated with him a number of the most prominent Democrats in the state, among them Gov. Lind and Maj. J. M. Bowler, formerly state dairy and food commissioner. Rumor has it, although it has not been confirmed, that Gov. Lind will assume the editorial management of the paper.

GROSS EARNINGS

BILL PROVIDING INCREASE OF RAILROAD TAX FROM 3 TO 4 PER CENT.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 21.—The house has now before it for consideration a bill providing for an increase in the railroad gross earnings taxes from three to four per cent. There will be a strong lobby against the bill but there seems to be hope for its passage. The passage of the bill would largely increase the revenue of the state and would still leave the railroads paying less taxes on their property than private individuals.

ANOTHER MILLION

THE CAPITOL COMMISSION SAYS IT NEEDS ONLY THAT MUCH MORE.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 19.—Several members of the legislature can now say "I told you so." The state capitol commission, convinced of the impossibility of completing the new capitol building on the present allowance of $2,000,000 has asked for an increase of half that amount. The bill of the commission, fixing the limit of cost at $3,000,000 has been introduced by Mr. Jackson, of Ramsey county.

SENATE COMMITTEE TURNS DOWN ALL ROAD AND BRIDGE BILLS.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 20.—The committee on roads and bridges of the senate has slaughtered all of the bills referred to it during the present session and advocates the passage of a constitutional amendment putting all such matters in the hands of a state highway commission. There was some opposition to this measure but the report was accepted and it is probable that the amendment suggested will be submitted at the next general election.

Company in Texas Prepares to Launch Its First Aerial Passenger Craft.

The first air-ship to be built by the Custard Airship company at its factory at Elmott, Tex., will be completed in a few days and launched on its initial trip. This company was organized several months ago with a capital stock of $[illegible]. It is composed of W. B. Custard, the inventor, and a number of prominent business men who closely investigated the working model of the new aerial vehicle and pronounced it practicable.

The company endeavored to manufacture machines in time to establish a line of them to ply between New York and Paris during the progress of the exposition at the French capital, but their construction was delayed, and it will be several months before regular lines of airships will be established between the principal cities of this country, should the one which is to be launched next week prove the success that is claimed for it.

The complete machine weighs 250 pounds and it has a capacity of from three to five people. Its maximum speed is expected to be 100 miles per hour. The first trip will be from Elmott to Waco, a distance of 20 miles.

PALMER LOSES MODEL GUESTS

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Seixas Leave for New York After a Stay of Twenty-Two Years.

The other day for the first time in 22 years and ten months room 358 of the Palmer house, Chicago, was vacant. The interesting part of it is that during all that time it has been occupied by one couple, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Seixas, and in their depature for New York, where they will make their future home, the hotel lost its star boarders. Mr. Seixas was a member of the firm of Cook, Lynnn & Seixas, which was for a number of years engaged in the wholesale hat business on Market street. About a year ago the firm went out of business. It was on January 4, 1878, that Mr. and Mrs. Seixas went to the Palmer house. They selected room 358, where they remained all during their long stay; and every Sunday morning promptly at eight o'clock Mr. Seixas appeared at the cashier's window and settled his bill for the week. He never missed a payment and never varied more than a minute or two from exactly eight o'clock. The stay of Mr. and Mrs. Seixas exceeds by several years that of any other guest of the house.

DONE BY EDDY

SECURES PASSAGE OF BILL FOR RELIEF OF SETTLERS ON N. P. LANDS.

Elmer E. Adams, of Fergus Falls, received a telegram Friday afternoon from Congressman Frank M. Eddy announcing that the bill for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific lands in Ottertail county had passed the house of representatives. This is the bill which was made a prominent issue in the last campaign. It was introduced last spring but before Congressman Eddy could get it through congress adjourned. Political enemies of Congressman Eddy tried to make political capital out of the fact that it was not passed, but he showed the people that it was impossible to put it through and assured them that he would do it as soon as possible. He has made good his word and again showed the people that he has earned the right to the title champion of the common people.

TO KILL MIDDLEMEN

A PROPOSITION TO LESSEN THE COST OF SCHOOL BOOKS IS PROPOSED.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 20.—There is a proposal on foot to lessen the cost of school books to pupils by taking away the profit of the middlemen. It is proposed to create a school book commission which shall buy all school books used in the state direct from the publishers and retail them to school children and districts at a price much lower than they are now forced to pay.

GOVERNOR STOPS EVENT SCHEDULED FOR MINNEAPOLIS.

Mayor Ames Declares His Intention to Enforce the Law to the Letter, Shutting Off Sparring Matches in Clubs and Gymnasiums—Big Cut of Logs in the Woods—Two "Blind Pigs" Smashed at Dawson—Bloody Duel at Rainy Lake City—State News in General.

St. Paul, Feb. 18.—At the request of Governor Van Sant, Mayor Ames of Minneapolis has agreed to prohibit the "sparring matches" that were to take place at the Exposition building Monday night. Governor Van Sant's request was made on the advice of Attorney General Douglas that the state law prohibits not merely prize fights but all kinds of sparring matches, with or without gloves.

The governor intimated that unless the proposed contests were prevented by the municipal authorities he would prevent them with the force at his own disposal. Mayor Ames bowed unreservedly to the law, but expressed the somewhat involved opinion that "a distinction is being drawn as between genuine sport and athletics in favor of class and fanatical class." He adds that he will forbid everything of the character within the city limits of the city of Minneapolis. Such prohibition may, according to the sweeping provisions of the law as quoted by the attorney general, result in the mayor's forbidding sparring matches at athletic clubs or at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium.

LOGGERS ARE HAPPY.

Best of Conditions Prevail in the Minnesota Woods.

Duluth, Feb. 18.—Just now the weather is mild and pleasant, but not too warm for logging, which is in the best possible shape. At camps throughout the district the input of logs now is enormous; hauling is fine and all conditions are all the logger can wish. There is a very large crop of logs along the new line of the Great Northern road west of Cass Lake, and around Bemidji the activity is tremendous. It is estimated that 5,000 men are employed in a radius of less than 10 miles from that village. Logs are coming from all directions, and the new line of the Minnesota and International will be busy next season hauling the winter's crop. The Swan River Logging company of Duluth is pushing its 100,000,000 feet along and has a tremendous bank at the mouth of the Swan, while its woods landings are piled high with logs that will take all summer to bring to the river.

MANY WERE CONVERTED.

State Convention of the Y. M. C. A. Closes at Mankato.

Mankato, Minn., Feb. 18.—The 27th annual convention of the Y. M. C. A. closed Sunday evening, and the delegates have returned to their homes. A quiet hour was passed by the delegates at the church Sunday morning and farewell services in the evening closed the three days' session. In the afternoon Fred B. Smith of Chicago gave a stirring address to young men at the opera house, which was crowded to its fullest capacity. Rev. Mr. Smith spoke on "A Strong Man," and created great enthusiasm among his hearers. One hundred young men were converted. Several of the delegates filled the pulpits of the local churches Sunday.

SMASHED TWO PIGS.

A Carrie A. Nation Club Doing Business at Dawson, Minn.

Dawson, Minn., Feb. 13.—A Carrie A. Nation club, consisting of about 150 people, mostly women, made a raid on the blind pigs here, smashing and cleaning them all out. They also visited the two drug stores, giving the proprietors warning that if they did not be more careful about giving liquor as prescriptions on slight pretenses that they would be dealt with in the Carrie Nation order.

A notable feature of the proceedings was that the wife of one of the druggists was one of the most enthusiastic crusaders. The spokesman of the crowd was a lady teacher of the public school.

CONSCIENCE SMITTEN.

Stranger Pays $500 Alleged to Be Due for Back Taxes.

Caledonia, Minn., Feb. 16.—While County Commissioner Von Arx was in La Crosse Tuesday a stranger approached him and asked if he was Mr. Von Arx, county commissioner of Houston county. Upon receiving a reply that he was, the stranger at once began counting money into the hands of Mr. Von Arx, saying, "Here is $500 I owe Houston county for back taxes," and immediately left, refusing to give his name, saying, "From an unknown person." Mr. Von Arx paid the $500 conscience money into the county treasury.

BLOODY DUEL FOUGHT.

One Principal Killed and the Other Fatally Wounded.

Duluth, Feb. 14.—One-armed Frank Sullivan and William Randolph fought the bloodiest duel in Rainy Lake City in the history of the international frontier of Minnesota. The top of Sullivan's head was blown off and he fell with the words "I am shot," and died instantly. Randolph, before he killed Sullivan, received two 38-caliber bullets, one entering his right side and the other tearing through his right ear and the side of his face. Randolph was desperately wounded. Sullivan was a well known gun fighter, highwayman and all-round desperate character. The duel between Sullivan and Randolph was the outcome of trouble between the men last summer.

EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL.

State Introduces More Testimony in the Hamilton Trial.

Minneapolis, Feb. 18.—Owing to the funeral of Judge Robert D. Russell, the day in the Hamilton-Day murder trial did not begin until afternoon. The defense having rested, the state began to introduce evidence in rebuttal. This it was expected would be mostly in the form of expert testimony from Doctors C. G. Weston and F. A. Dunsmoor, tending to overthrow the deductions of Dr. Erdmann that the fatal blow was delivered from behind its victim. It was also expected that the state would produce a witness who claims to have overheard a part of the "confession" which Policeman Rooney swore Hamilton made to him.

SENATORS COMING WEST.

Will Make a Summer Trip to Indian Reservations.

Washington, Feb. 19.—The Indian reservations in Minnesota and other states of the Northwest will be visited during a recess of congress by the senate committee on Indian affairs, with a view to giving the committeemen information, as a result of personal investigation, concerning the many intricate questions pending before the interior department and congress relating to the affairs of the red men. The trip will probably consume several weeks' time, and will give opportunity for the committeemen to investigate timber questions and the school systems on the various reservations of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakotas.

Chief Good Thunder has been a special protege of Bishop Whipple for many years.

St. Paul, Feb. 14.—The Modern Woodmen held their state camp in this city Wednesday and succeeded in finishing up all their business. Never mix chilled milk with fresh, as the latter will be injured, says the Home Magazine.

Silver may be kept bright for months by being kept in an air-tight place. It is the action of the atmosphere which tarnishes silver.

Next to sunlight the incandescent light gives the best illumination for reading. Electric light is not injurious to the eyes.

Before repainting woodwork, have it carefully washed so as to remove all dust, finger marks, stains, etc. Put a tablespoonful of ammonia to each half gallon of warm water, which will make the work easier and more effective.

Brown Bread and Bacon.

Cook half a dozen slices of bacon in the hot blazer. For chafing-dish cookery, I invariably use the delicately cut slices of bacon which come in a glass jar. Cut the crust from several slices of Boston brown bread, and fry it in the fat which comes from the bacon until crusty. Serve with two morsels of bacon on each slice.—Good Housekeeping.

Glazed Carrots.

Boil 12 small carrots in salted water until tender; drain, cut in slices crosswise and saute slightly in butter. Add one tablespoonful each of butter and sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, a dash of pepper and a hint of nutmeg to half cupful of boiling water, and stir until dissolved; lay carrots in shallow baking pan, pour liquor over and bake in hot oven until nicely browned.—Ladies' World, New York.

The Simple Things of Life.

The simplest things are the things that really appeal to us most, and that is only because when we are simple we are natural. An enjoyment that is natural is always the deepest and truest. The moment the artificial, the conventional, comes into our lives, that moment the sweetest realizations go out.—Edward Bok, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Ancient Pie.

"Look here," said the customer, as he took the first bite. "I don't think much of this pie."

"What's wrong with it?" demanded the baker, fiercely. "Young man, I made pies before you were born."

"I dare say you did," was the reply, "but I didn't ask you for one of them."—Pick-Me-Up.

Pan-American Exposition.

On the American Shore of the Niagara River on the outskirts of the City of Buffalo, N. Y., within short distance of Niagara Falls, from May 1st to November 1st, 1901, will transpire one of the most important events in the history of the Western Hemisphere. The curtain of the Great Show will be raised, which will present the opening scene in a blaze of glory, never before equaled in the history of America. This colossal aggregation of exhibits will show the wonderful achievements of science, exemplified by the matchless genius of the two Americas, and fittingly portray their high educational values.

The Nickel Plate Road has issued attractive and valuable descriptive folder pamphlets, elaborately illustrating the Pan-American Exposition, fully describing this important event, and elaborately illustrating the Buildings and Grounds.

That popular Passenger Line offers competent train service between Chicago and Buffalo, as it does also between Chicago and New York City, Boston and all points east, with modern trains supplied with the latest designs of Drawing Room Buffet Pullman Sleeping Cars, and Dining Car service of the highest order. The Nickel Plate Road offers meals in its Dining Cars on the popular American Individual Club System, ranging in prices to suit the appetite, from thirty five cents to one dollar, but no meals at a cost greater than one dollar. No excess fares are charged on any train of the Nickel Plate Road.

FALCON ISLAND REAPPEARS.

The Little Island in the Pacific Which Disappeared Comes Again Into View.

Falcon island, which early last year was reported to have completely disappeared beneath the waves of the Pacific, is again showing its flat surface above the water. The life history of this speck of land has been unusual and interesting. A cable dispatch from Europe printed in April last year said that after a brief life of 14 years Falcon island had ceased to exist. It was thought that no trace of it would ever be seen again. But Mr. Vossinn, the consul general of France in the Tonga group, announces that Commandant Ravenhill, of the cruiser Porpoise, has returned to those islands from a cruise in the Pacific with the news of the reemergence of Falcon island. He says that the highest part of the island is now about 16 feet above sea level.

The island was formed by a great volcanic eruption at the bottom of the sea in 1885. It took the waves and storms of the ocean 14 years entirely to obliterate it. Mr. J. J. Lister, who visited the island a short time before it disappeared, said that it was rapidly being torn to pieces by the action of the waves. Unless a fresh volcanic outburst occurred he thought it would soon disappear. His prediction came true, and a steamer that visited the place about the beginning of last year reported that not a trace of it was to be found above the water level.

The island was built up in the neighborhood of the Tonga group about 35 miles from the Island of Tofoos. A submarine volcano had reared from the bottom of the ocean a colossal mass of ejecta, and on this foundation rested the cone which rose above the water. The island consisted of two distinct parts. One of them was a hill of steep slope and wider base, whose height was 153½ feet. On one side the hill ended abruptly in a cliff, whose base was washed by the sea at high water. The other part of the island was a flat extending away from the base of the hill in a northerly direction and only ten to twelve feet above the high tide level. The whole bit of land was just a bare, brown heap of ashes around which the great rollers broke and swept up the black shores in sheets of foam. The island was entirely destitute of any vegetation save for a half dozen seedling plants that had found lodgment there.

It will not be strange if the island is torn to pieces and again disappears from view within a very few years. Its reappearance now is doubtless due to another volcanic eruption. Volcanic islands seldom endure many years unless they are so large or so well protected against the sea that there is time for them to become covered with dense masses of vegetation before ocean storms have an opportunity to tear them to pieces.

SPIRITED COMPETITION.

New Firms Seek to Secure Contracts for the Building of Warships.

The monopoly of constructing warships of the largest type hitherto enjoyed by three concerns in this country, promises to be invaded by four or five firms, which have expressed a great desire to make proposals for the construction of the vessels, bids for which will be opened on December 6. The three firms which have always bid upon this work are the Union iron works, of San Francisco; the Cramp Building and Dry Dock company, of Philadelphia, and the Newport News (Va.) Shipbuilding company. It now appears that these firms will have as rivals the Fore River Shipbuilding company, of Weymouth, Mass.; Townsend & Downey, of New York; the New York Shipbuilding company, of New York city; the Trigg Engine and Shipbuilding company, of Richmond, Va., and the Risdon iron works, of San Francisco. The appearance of the latter firm in the list of competitors is something of a surprise. It will make it interesting for the Union iron works, which has had no competitors in the race for naval contracts covering large ships on the Pacific coast.

A Clear Head.

To the engineer who has the powerful forces of nature under his control, the possession of a clear head is an absolute necessity. He must have a head that is quick and ready, wide awake and ever on the lookout to meet emergencies. A clear head must be free from aches and pains, because they weaken the nervous force and divert the attention. It must not know dizziness, dullness, melancholy depression of spirits, nor nervousness.

"I am an engineer and for years was handicapped in my work by frequent attacks of severe headache. In spite of everything I could do these spells grew worse until they became almost continual. Hearing of Dr. Miles' Nervine through a friend who had used it, I began taking it for my head, and it gave me relief from the start. In a short time my head was as clear as a bell, and has not troubled me since." E. W. WILSON, Alcott, Colo.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Relieves every form of head trouble and gives to the entire system that vigor, energy and snap that make clear-headedness. Try a bottle for yourself.

A FRENCH OPINION.

Deputy Lucien Millevoi, editor of La Patrie, Paris, makes the following statement written especially for the American public, the source from which, many Frenchmen still persist in believing, decisive succor for the Boer cause will finally come:

"It is very hard for British pride to admit that the immense resources of the British empire are powerless against the heroic obstinacy of 20,000 armed peasants. The new king, his ministers and generals, wish at least to save appearances. This, however, is not easy after so many emphatic proclamations and lying bulletins of victory. Severities are as useless as the barbarous defiance of the law of nations and the universal conscience has proved.

"It must be confessed that the largest empire on the globe cannot crush, as in the beginning it declared it could and would do, this little people, separated by geographical position from all the rest of the world."

"It is too hard for the descendants of William the Conqueror, the inheritors of the policy of Pitt and Palmerston, to do this."

"I feel certain, however, that Edward VII has considered the conditions of a possible arbitration of the Boer question. The king knows that the kaiser would regard the Anglo-American alliance as valueless if England remained embarrassed with the South Africa difficulty. The question is what way out of the matter was suggested by the kaiser. If the Boers are capable of continuing the fight for six months longer, the peace party in England would gain ground, and King Edward would ask nothing better than to have his hand forced by his people."

Dr. H. L. E. Johnson, who was vice-president of the Pan American Medical Congress recently held in Havana, brought back some interesting views of the perplexing Cuban problem. He said: "I went to Cuba impressed with the idea that it ought to be free and independent. I have returned convinced that the American flag must never be taken down from the island. The moment the flag comes down there will be civil war. No one who knows the conditions in the island can dispute this statement. Annexation to the U. S. is the one hope and prayer of all the people whose opinions are worthy of consideration. I talked with all classes, and found the sentiment for annexation expressed by everybody except those who have Cuban bonds, and who, because we will not take the bonds, would sell them to any foreign nation, without regard to the international complications which might ensue. In my judgment, and I speak advisedly, the duty of the U. S. is to courageously declare that the Teller resolution while right and proper, possibly, at the time of its enactment, is not applicable to present circumstances, and ought to be repealed or disregarded. The reputation of the U. S. for honesty and fair dealing will sustain us in this action."

The action of Gov. Van Sant in ordering Mayor Ames of Minneapolis to prevent the "fistic carnival" scheduled for Minneapolis Monday night has met with general approbation. The carnival was to consist of half a dozen six round boxing contests with gloves, by no means prize fights. But the law specifically prohibits sparring contests, and the fact that the law was about to be violated was evident. The prompt action of the governor prevented a scandal on the fair name of the state.

The creameries of Redwood county in this state produced 1,500,000 pounds of butter last year. The average price received for this butter was 20 cents a pound which makes the neat sum of $300,000 distributed among the farmers who patronized the creameries in that county last year.

The Gazette presents its readers this week with the financial statement of Red Lake county, as prepared by County Auditor Zeh. We doubt if there is a more complete financial statement published anywhere, and Mr. Zeh is to be congratulated on presenting a document to the people which gives them the opportunity of a clear insight into the financial condition of the county. It is evident that nothing has been omitted and he has spared no [illegible] or in its preparation. Red Lake county has every reason to be pleased with the auditor.

It is feared that the action of Secretary Gage in ordering a retaliatory duty collected on Russian sugar equal to the sugar export bounty paid by Russia—nearly one cent a pound—will result in a commercial war with that country. The sugar trust is credited with having secured this action, in the face of a declaration from Russia that if it were taken it would be followed by the imposition of the maximum tariff upon American machinery and other American manufactures of iron and steel and perhaps upon other American goods. The Russian government denies that it pays an export bounty on sugar; the sugar trust claims that it does, and Secretary Gage has now officially endorsed that claim. Last year we bought Russian sugar to the value of $300,000 and sold Russia goods to the value of $30,000,000.

Where Tramps Get Their Gall.

It has been told frequently by persons who claim to be connoisseurs of cooked birds of all kinds that the only proper way to prepare a squab for the table is to incase it in mud and leave it on the burning coals, then remove it, break the mud and the squab rolls out splendidly cooked and fit for the gods to eat.

A tramp who applied for lodging at Central police station the other night said the same rule was true in the cooking of spring chickens. "The tramps' way to cook chicken is the only way," said he. "Steal one for yourself, wring her head off, pack her into a handful of mud, throw her in the fire, leave her there for about 40 minutes, jerk her out, break the mud shell, and there you are, à la Waldorf-Astoria. Why, it can't be beat."

"But what becomes of the feathers?"

"O, they just burn and evaporate, so to speak. You never see them after the chicken is taken out of the fire."

"How about the gall?"

"O, that's where the tramps get their gall."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

FUTILE PUNISHMENTS.

Nothing manifests a teacher's want of real power so unmistakably as the method of punishment employed. It is needless to say that frequent resort to the rod in the school room reflects far more discredit upon the teacher than upon the pupils who are the victims. "Keeping after school" as a punishment for lesson failures, whispering in school, and every species of disorder, bespeaks a weak teacher. Sending pupils from the room, day after day, to loiter in the corridors or on the school grounds, indicates a deplorable want of power. The extent to which the teacher succeeds in dispensing with these methods of punishing minor infractions of order and good discipline, is a measure of her real teaching power. Such punishments can have no permanent value; in special cases they may be of temporary use. When practiced daily, they serve to demoralize the school and weaken the influence of the teacher.—Educational Exchange.

Red Lake Falls people are glad to hear their business and professional men praised by strangers. The writer last Thursday heard a prominent outsider give our mayor, Dr. Watson, credit for being one of the foremost physicians in Northern Minnesota. Our own people know this, and we are glad to see the fact appreciated abroad.

Peter Morrissette came up from Cass Lake Monday for a visit with his little girl and boy, who are being cared for at the home of their grandmother, Mrs. O. LaFreniere. Peter says he gets lonely for the little ones, and the only relief is to come and visit them for a few days after which he can go back and do twice as much work to make up for lost time.

One of the large Eastern houses will send a special agent to serve Mr. LaBissoniere's customers on this occasion.

Wm. Schwalen on Friday sold his farm, formerly "Chicken" Nelson's place, to Cris. Getty, of Arlington, for $2100, retaining his equity in 200 cords of wood taken from the place during the winter. Mr. Schwalen bought the place less than a year ago for $1500 and has cleaned up about a thousand dollars on the deal, while it was considered that he paid a high price for the farm.

Chas. T. Grace and Ole Christianson of the Ellwood Land Co. chartered a bobsled conveyance Tuesday and drove to St. Hilaire, snuggly nestled low down in the box. We understand some of the city's fair daughters have expressed themselves quite strongly on the monopoly of so good a thing, but are willing to overlook it this time.

Ralph Green, the prominent and popular Equality farmer, who served as petit juryman in district court last week, left Saturday afternoon for Wahpeton, N. D., to visit at the house of his brother-in-law, J. French, president of the People's Bank. There he will also meet his mother, Mrs. C. M. Green, of New York, who is at present a guest of her daughter, Mrs. French.

City officials inform The Gazette that Philip Chayer has instituted a suit against the city of Red Lake Falls to recover $480, the amount which he paid for liquor license during the last year he was in business. The license fee is $500 and at the time the sheriff closed his place of business he still owed $20, in default of payment of which the license was not delivered, although it was issued. Chayer's contention seems to be that inasmuch as he had no license the city owes him the amount. It looks like ingratitude on his part.

M. J. McCann, representing Brown, Treacy & Co., the St. Paul printers and lithographers, was in the city Tuesday.

Miss Agnes Garceau returned from Grand Forks Friday, where she had been in attendance at St. Bernard's Academy.

The dance last Saturday night at the Maccabee hall was a very pleasant little event. Prof. Juliot, the harpist, furnished the music.

Wilfrid and Adelard Lemieux have gone to Grand Forks where they have accepted positions with Thos. Beare, who has purchased the salvage from Platky's store, recently destroyed by fire.

Theo. Pichette left Tuesday for Blackduck, where he recently invested $600 cash in realestate. If Mr. Pichette is wise and unloads soon he may come out of it all right. The family are in Michigan visiting with Mrs. Pichette's parents.

Mrs. and Mrs. Chas. Zutz, of Polk Centre, have an extraordinarily bright lot of children. This fact has often been spoken of by the neighbors and the teachers in their district have always agreed to it. There is much in store for them and they will make their marks. The latest evidence was given by Mr. Zutz last Saturday, when he and his estimable wife were in the city shopping. "Here's a dollar for the paper" said Mr. Zutz; "My children say they can't get along without The Gazette."

Court adjourned Saturday afternoon, and Judge Watts, Stenographer Lohn, and the attorneys from outside cities bade our people adieu until October, when the mills of justice will grind once more. Several cases were disposed of after our last week's issued was out—A. Gray received a judgment of $3,000 against the Red Lake Falls Lumber Co., J. A. Bray's case vs. P. A. Kanfer et al. resulted in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $200. It is likely both cases will be appealed. The divorce case of Ed. Hamry vs. Elisa Hamry was tried and the decision of the court was reserved.

O. B. Satre, who has been employed as book-keeper in the Bank of Red Lake Falls, is very low as a result of several hemorrhages of the lungs since Friday. It is not thought that he can recover. Mr. Satre resides with his wife and three children on Hamilton Ave. in the dwelling formerly occupied by Wm. Zaiser and family. He has been troubled with weak lungs for years, and has suffered hemorrhages before, but they are now occurring at short intervals and it is feared that he cannot long survive. Although he has been a resident of this city but a short time, he has become well acquainted with the patrons of the bank, and the family have the sympathy of all.

How a Boy Measured a Tree.

He is not a boy in a book. He lives in our house. He seldom says anything remarkable. He eats oatmeal in large quantities and tears his trousers and goes through the toes of his boots and loses his cap and slams the doors and chases the cat just like any other boy. But he is remarkable, for he asks a few questions and does much thinking. If he does not understand, he whistles—an excellent habit on most occasions.

There was much whistling in our yard one summer. It seemed to be an all summer's performance. Near the end of the season, however, our boy announced the height of our tall maple to be 33 feet.

"Why how do you know?" was the general question.

"Measured it."

"How?"

"Footrule and yardstick."

"You didn't climb that tall tree?" his mother asked anxiously.

"No, mother; I just found the length of the shadow and measured that."

"But the length of the shadow changes."

"Yes, mother, but twice a day the shadows are just as long as things themselves. I've been trying it all summer. I drove a stick into the ground, and when the shadow was just as long as the stick I knew that the shadow of the tree would be just as long as the tree, and that's 33 feet."

"So that is what you have been whistling about all summer?"

"Did I whistle?" asked Tom.

CHAPTER I.

THE GREAT STRIKE.

"They say 5,000 men have gone out of the Champion and De Mott mines this morning," said one of the passengers in the train to the young man in the seat by him as they slowly drew up to the station.

"I wonder if that is so?" replied his companion. "There seems to be something unusual going on. Well, goodby. This is my home. I shall soon know all about it."

The young man caught up his traveling bag and hurried out upon the platform.

The station was entirely deserted except by a few of the railroad employees. The young man looked around a moment, as if expecting some one, and then walked hastily across the platform and around the corner of the station. From the side of the building the town and the public square were in full view. And as they came in sight the passenger gave an exclamation of wonder.

The public square was a small park, with a band stand in the middle of it. It was situated at the meeting point of several streets, each of which seemed to wander down the hills from the different mining districts, starting first as a footpath trod by the miners, then developing into a piece of country road, adding on fragments of wooden sidewalks as it approached the town and finally growing into a street with paving and cement walks and stores and office buildings on either side. Directly in front of the band stand, facing the park, stood a large church, which with its lot occupied the entire space between two streets. The railway station formed one side of the heptagon made by the converging of the seven streets. Another church building, two streets from the other, formed another side. The rest of the buildings fronting the park were stores, offices of various mining companies and a large hotel.

Into this center of the heart of the mining town of Champion on this particular morning, in the year of our Lord 1895, was gathered the largest crowd Stuart Duncan ever saw there. This young man was the son of Ross Duncan, owner of the largest mines in Champion. He was 30 years old, had finished his college education and was just home this morning from a year's trip in Europe. As he came down from the railway station platform and pushed his way into the crowd he said to himself that in all his travels abroad he had not seen anything to compare with the remarkable gathering in this mining town where he had been reared previous to his college life in the east.

The minute he stepped into the crowd several voices called out: "Stuart, lad, give us your hand! Glad to see you back!" The voices were in different tones and various degrees of brogue, Cornish, Finn, English, Irish, Scotch. He noticed the subdued action of the men. They were excited, but under control. The band stand was crowded with familiar faces, but Stuart Duncan looked at only one. That was the face of a short but muscular young man who was standing with head uncovered upon the bench which ran around the inside of the stand. He had thick black hair, deep set black eyes, heavy eyebrows, large features, smooth face and short, round neck. He stood leaning forward a little, his left hand around one of the supports to the roof of the stand, his right holding an old hat which moved gently up and down.

Stuart moved up nearer the stand until he was within easy speaking distance. As he crowded in closer he was finally stopped by the great pressure of the men. Several voices greeted him, but all of them quietly, and the interest of the gathering seemed centered in the figure that stood leaning out a little over the crowd.

"What's it all about? What's the trouble?" asked Stuart of the men around him. "What's Eric doing up there?"

Before any one could reply the young man standing on the bench began to speak. His words came very slowly, as if every one of them was being thought out carefully. He stopped every motion of his body and stood perfectly still. The great crowd in the square was so quiet that Stuart thought for a second of a scene he once witnessed in an English cathedral when 4,000 people were kneeling just before a special service began.

"Brothers," said the speaker, whom Stuart had called Eric, "this is no ordinary movement in the history of labor. What we have done and what we are about to do are of the most serious consequence. We have made a demand for wages such as will sustain us and our families this winter in comfort. It has been refused, and we have come out of the mines determined to make a peaceful but resistless protest for the rights of our manhood." The speaker paused a moment, and Stuart noticed the hand around the post tighten its grip. Then he continued. The quiet of the crowd was, if possible, more deep than before.

"Brothers, we need more than human wisdom at such a time as this. It is fitting that we bow our heads and implore divine aid." Every head in the square was uncovered as the speaker's voice rang out clear and strong over the crowd:

"Lord, we need thy help today. We ask for wisdom. Grant us to know thy will. O Lord, keep us from committing any lawless act. Keep every man here from drunkenness and violence to property or life. We want simply our rights as men. We want wages sufficient to live in comfort. Show us what to do. Keep us today from evil. Bless all men who work with their hands. Bless our families. We ask it for Jesus' sake. Amen." [This incident is based on fact. The writer of this story was witness to a gathering of iron miners in the great strike of July, 1895, where one of the miners offered just such a prayer as the above, at Negaunee, Mich., July 24, 1895.]

The speaker lifted his head, and the miners put on their hats. Stuart looked out over the heads of the crowd and up at the man who had just prayed and then out beyond him to the pine covered hills dotted over with the engine houses and stock piles of ore. He noticed the smoke curling from the furnace stacks and said to himself, "The pumps are going yet." The whole scene was very vivid to him. The crowd, the churches, the park, the stand, that familiar face and figure up there, the hills, the mines, the whole with its strong setting of human interest, smote him almost with a shock. And at the very nerve center of the shock was that brief prayer. It was so strange, so unusual, so like a story, so unlike real life.

Eric was speaking again. He was making an appeal to the miners to commend their cause to the world by their conduct. He spoke, as before he had prayed, very slowly and carefully. Toward the end of his speech he caught sight of Stuart.

His face flushed for an instant. The eyes of the two men met. The look on each man's face seemed to say, "I wonder if he is still the same?"

A clock in the steeple of the larger of the two churches struck 8. Eric jumped down from the bench, and another miner took his place and spoke in a more impassioned manner to the men. There were cheers and swinging of hats. Stuart gradually worked his way out of the crowd, stopped frequently by acquaintances. At last he had come out in front of the church with the clock in the tower, looking about him eagerly for some one from his own home, when a strong voice from a man standing on the church steps above him exclaimed:

"Say, Stuart, when did you join the strike?"

"Doctor," cried Stuart eagerly, with a smile of welcome that lighted up his thoughtful face wonderfully, "next to father and Louise you are the very person I wanted to see most. Where are they? They were to meet me at the train this morning. Isn't this a most astonishing affair? Tell me all about it."

The doctor shrugged his shoulders. "You know as much about it as I do. The men went out this morning without notice. The Freeport, Vasplaine and De Mott miners are all here with the Champion men. They walked over from the lower range early this morning."

"What do the men want?" Stuart asked vaguely. He had so many questions to put he asked the first that occurred.

The doctor shrugged his shoulders again.

"The contract miners want $2 a day, the trammers $1.75 and the men at the top $1.50."

"Who is the leader of the men?"

"You see for yourself: Eric Vassall. And it seems only yesterday that you two teen were young kids in knickerbockers tumbling down the mines and worrying the life out of the companies because of your pranks. And now Eric is the leader of the biggest strike on record among the miners, playing the role of prophet and priest and I don't know what all, and you"—

"And I," interrupted Stuart, with another smile, as he pulled the doctor down off the step above him, "I am—so far—nobody, until I have had my breakfast. I can't understand where father and Louise can be. Haven't you seen them this morning?"

"No. Get into my buggy. I will take you up to the house."

The doctor's office fronted on the square, and his horse stood near by. Stuart took one glance back at the crowd as he and the doctor started up the street.

"It is a remarkable scene. I have not witnessed anything like it abroad. I have seen several strikes in England and Germany and France since I have been away. But I never knew a strike to be opened with prayer, did you, doctor?"

"No," replied the doctor dryly.

Stuart looked at him. He was driving, as always, with one foot outside the buggy, the lines gathered up in a careless way in one hand and the horse tearing along like mad up the stanly, red, iron ore street, for they were off the paving now and going up a sharp grade cut through one of the numerous hills that surrounded the town. The doctor always drove that way, and a ride with him was as exciting, Stuart used to say, as working in a powder mill during a thunderstorm.

"Why? Don't you think the prayer was sincere?" Stuart asked.

"Sincere enough. But, pshaw! What's the use? We all know how the strike will end, prayer or no prayer."

"What's happened to Eric, doctor? He never used to be religious. Not that way."

"Salvation Army," replied the doctor briefly.

"Oh!" Stuart looked puzzled, but he thought he would have it all out with Eric. There was so much to tell, ever since they had parted a year ago. So many grave questions had arisen in their lives that needed to be discussed. He was growing anxious as they drove along concerning his father and sister. It was very strange that they had not met him at the station. But the strike and all might have kept his father. It was a different home coming from that of his anticipation.

The house stood back from the road on the side of the hill. It was a handsome brick mansion, surrounded by a dozen immense pines. Stuart loved the place. It was dear to his memories. He had no recollection of any other home, although he had been born in one of the eastern states. It was in this house that his mother had died when he was 10 years old. He owed his thoughtful, romantic, truthful nature to her. From his father, on the other hand, he had inherited his slow, stubborn, occasional fierce bursting out of passionate feelings. He thought of all the happy times in the old house where as a boy and later as college man he had enjoyed all the luxuries of wealth and leisure and companionship.

Suddenly a man drove out of the roadway into which he and the doctor were just turning to go up to the house. Both men pulled up just in time to avoid running into each other.

"Is that you, Dr. Saxon?" shouted the man. "I was just going for you. Mr. Duncan has been hurt. The horses ran away this morning and"—

Stuart did not wait to hear more. He jumped out of the buggy and at the top of his speed cut through the grounds in front of the house. The doctor uttered an exclamation, gave his horse one short stroke with the whip and dashed up the driveway like a whirlwind. At the end of the long veranda he stopped long enough to jump out and let the horse go on to the barn. He met Stuart just leaping up the veranda steps.

"Now, then, my boy," said the doctor quietly, filling up the doorway with his large frame and getting directly in front of Stuart, "don't get excited. This is my case, not yours."

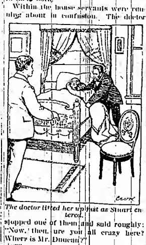
"Let me by!" cried Stuart, his face almost black with passion. "He is my father! Perhaps he is dying! What right have you to keep in the way?"

"Very well." The doctor spoke softly, almost like a child. He stepped aside and began to walk slowly down the veranda steps. "You have inherited the Duncan passion to perfection, but if your father dies through your nonsensical exercise of it just now don't blame me."

Stuart made one stride and caught the doctor's arm. "Come back!" he said. All his black passion was gone in an instant. "I will be a man like you. Come! You will perhaps need my help."

The doctor looked keenly at him and at once turned around and entered the house with him. The incident would not mean anything without a knowledge of what was at stake on this occasion. But Dr. Saxon had good reason to believe that the life of the son in this instance was imperiled by the fearful excitement which at rare intervals broke out in him like a torrent. To confront the father with him under those conditions might prove serious, to them both.

Within the house servants were running about in confusion. The doctor stopped one of them and said roughly: "Now, then, are you all crazy here? Where is Mr. Duncan?"



The doctor lifted her up just as Stuart entered.

"They carried him into the north room," was the answer.

"North room! Why didn't you carry him to the north pole and be done with it! Here, Stuart! Send one of the men down for my black case at the office and then come to your father."

The doctor went down the long hall, turned to the right into another corridor and entered a large room at the end.

Lying over the bed in the middle of the room was a young woman. Her arms were clasped over the face of the man who lay there, and she had fainted in that position.

The doctor lifted her up just as Stuart entered.

"O God! Louise, too!" he cried.

The doctor gave him a look that calmed him and replied: "No; she is in a faint. Now, then, use all the sense you have, and it won't be too much. You look after your sister while I see to your father."

He put Louise into Stuart's arms, who, with the servant's help, soon restored her to consciousness, while the doctor turned to the man on the bed and in a masterly manner proceeded to do all that his skill and keenness of practice could do.

Ross Duncan lay like a dead man. He was of powerful build and looked very stern and hard even as he lay there helpless. There was a terrible gash over one of his eyes. He was covered with blood and dust, bruised from head to foot, with clothes torn and disfigured, but he had not lost consciousness, and, with the iron will which had always characterized him, he managed to let the doctor know his wishes.

"All right, all right, Mr. Duncan," said the doctor in reply to a whisper from the wounded man. "I won't give you any anaesthetic if you don't want it. I shall have to sew up this little place over your eye, though. Has that tortoise got around with that case yet?" he asked Stuart, who had left Louise a minute to come over to the bed.

"He hasn't had time yet, doctor."

"Why didn't he take my horse?" growled the doctor. "How is Louise?"

"Better. But what a terrible fall father must have had!"

Stuart felt for his father's hand, and Ross Duncan's fingers closed over those of his son. Stuart kneeled by the bed and kissed his father's cheek as he used to do when a boy. The older man was evidently moved by the caress. A tear rolled over his face.

"Come now," broke in the doctor, apparently gruffer than ever. "One would think you two hadn't seen each other for a year at least! We must get him ready for the operation. Stuart, you promised to help me. Give me your attention now."

The doctor soon had his patient as comfortable as the nature of the injuries would allow. The case arrived, the gash was sewed up quickly, and at the end of the hour Ross Duncan was resting under the influence of a draft, while the doctor, Stuart and Louise were in another room talking over the accident.

The sister of Stuart Duncan was very pretty, very proud and very selfish. She was 6 years younger than her brother. She had been two years to a finishing school in New York, but had not finished any particular branch of study. She could play the piano a little and the harp a little and do other things, except housework, a little. She lay on the lounge now, with Stuart near by stroking her head, and told the story of the accident:

"Father and I started to drive down to the station this morning to meet you, Stuart. When we reached the crossroad leading up to the Forge mine, we were early for the train, and father drove up to the engine house on some business. When we got up there, the miners were gathering to march down to the square. It was the first news of the strike we had had. Father was very much excited and talked to the men to persuade them to go back to work. Some of them talked back in the most insulting way; said they were free men and did not have to work for a corporation and all that. You know how they talk, Stuart. Nothing makes father so angry, and I don't blame him. I think the men are simply horrid to make all this trouble just now as I was getting ready to go east for that yachting cruise with the Vasplaines, and this strike will probably stop their going.

"Then father jumped out of the carriage and was going to give one of the men who insulted him a good thrashing, and serve him right, when the rest came around and made him get into the carriage again. I never saw father so angry, and I was scared almost to death, the men were so rough. We drove back to the crossroad, and at that steep turn by that old Henry shaft we came upon a crowd of miners marching into town from the lower range. They were carrying a large white banner with some horrid picture on it. The horses were frightened and turned and ran right toward the old shaft. I don't know what happened then, only we were thrown out, and it is a miracle that I was not killed. Jem, the coachman, was driving, and he fell on a pile of shaft ore. He ran up to the house and got the other horses and brought father and me home. I fainted away several times, and when I saw father laid on the bed with that awful gash on his head I thought he was killed. If he dies, the miners will be to blame. If it hadn't been for their going out on this strike, this horrible accident would not have happened. It's all as horrid as it can be!"

At this point Louise burst into a great fit of hysterical crying.

"Dear, you must have been hurt by the fall!" cried Stuart as he soothed and comforted her.

"No, no! I was not even bruised!" replied Louise. She stopped crying and sat up on the lounge and began to arrange her hair.

Dr. Saxon walked toward the other end of the room with a peculiar look on his face. Then he wheeled around and said with his characteristic bluntness: "I must go back to the office. I've left directions for your father's treatment. He is not dangerously hurt. Send for me if I am needed. Miss Louise, you had better take those powders and keep as quiet as possible today."

He laid the medicine down on a table and went out. A minute later his horse was heard rushing by the veranda and down the road.

So this was the home coming of Stuart Duncan after his year's absence abroad. He had visited with interest many of the famous capitals of Europe. He had sauntered through museums and picture galleries, he had studied not very profoundly, but with genuine interest, the people he had met and the customs he had observed that were new. The year had been very largely a holiday for him. He had used all the money he wished, drawing on his letter of credit without any thought of economy. His father was several times a millionaire and never stinted the money. What he wanted was that his son and daughter should have the best of everything, from clothes and food to education and travel. And Stuart had gone through college and through Europe with about the same easy feeling of having a comfortable time. He was perfectly healthy, had no vices (he did not even like a cigar), unusually thoughtful on some questions, with no particular ambitions and no special enthusiasms. If he gave his future any thought while abroad, it was simply to picture a life of business in connection with his father's mining interests. That was his father's desire, and Stuart did not have any other.

He had come home from the picture galleries and cathedrals of the old world to face first of all this tough incident of his father's injury. In connection with it was the strike, which was specially personal not only because it involved the Duncan interests, but because the leader of it was Eric Vassall, Stuart's old playfellow and friend. The more he thought of Eric the more he felt the strike to be a serious matter. So much might be involved in it for him and Eric.

Nearly a week went by before Ross Duncan was able to sit up and talk much. During that time Stuart faithfully remained at home. He had not seen Eric, and Eric, as he supposed, had not been to see him. His father and Louise needed his constant care. But he anticipated meeting his old playfellow with a curious feeling of excitement whenever he thought of that scene in the public square and recalled the prayer and its effect.

At the end of the week father and son were talking together over the situation. The miners were still out, and the strike was still on, with no prospect of settlement.

"I tell you, Stuart," said Ross Duncan, while his great square chin grew hard and tense, "the companies will never concede the demands of the men. I will never go an inch to meet them while they are in their present attitude."

"Do you think the men ask too much, father?"

"Too much! With ore at the present price! It is outrageous, just when we were beginning to get on our feet again. It has been a very dull winter, and things were just beginning to turn our way again."

"But I thought ore had gone up. Isn't that what the men claim as the reason for their demand for an increase? They say the wages ought to go up with the rise in ore."

"They are fools!" Ross Duncan struck the pillow beside him passionately. "The companies were under contract for large quantities of ore at the old price before this rise came. The rise will not benefit us any until we have disposed of our old contracts."

"Why don't the companies tell the men so?"

"Pshaw! Stuart, you are"— Ross Duncan controlled himself violently. Stuart was alarmed for him. He rose and went over nearer the bed.

"Father, you must not get excited. Remember what Dr. Saxon said yesterday. You must not talk any more on this subject."

"I shall. There. I can control my self."

It was wonderful to see the change that came over the man. He stiffened his muscles, then relaxed them and let his hand, which had been clinched, open easily and lie open on the bed clothes. Then he spoke without a quiver of passion, slowly and coldly:

"The companies do not tell the men so because the men wouldn't believe a word the companies say. Yet there isn't a man in our mines who can say Ross Duncan ever cheated a man out of a penny or ever told him an untruth. I tell you, Stuart, the men are the most stubborn, ungrateful, ignorant lot of animals that ever lived. Why, all last winter I kept more than a dozen families going with food and fuel because they had been sick or shiftless, and I'll warrant you those very families are in the front row of the parades every morning! The men are cutting their own throats. The companies will never give in."

Stuart did not say anything for awhile. Then: "Don't you think, father, that the men have been very quiet and law abiding? There has been no disturbance thus far."

"Wait till we get the new men in from Chicago and then see."

"Will the companies try to do that?"

"They certainly will if the strike continues another week. We lose our contracts unless we can deliver the ore as specified."

"Isn't it a little remarkable, father," said Stuart after another pause, "that the men have opened their meetings in the square every morning with prayer?"

Ross Duncan uttered a sound that represented more scorn than a hundred words.

"Whom do they pray to—the devil?"

"The prayer I heard the first morning I came home was as good a prayer as I ever heard in church."

"Who offered it?"

"Eric," replied Stuart, flushing up a little.

"He is the leader of the whole strike, the most dangerous man on the range today. I advise you to break with him."

Stuart leaned forward a little. "You remember, father, Eric saved my life when the skip broke in the shaft?"

"Well, it was only what any man would do. You are not under any great debt to him."

Stuart did not reply. He felt the strange passion he inherited from his father rising in him, and after a few questions as to his father's condition he went out of the room.

That afternoon he went up on the hills for the first time since his return. He sat down near one of the mines and thought over his talk with his father. Then he grew restless and walked down into the town. As he passed the office he went in and found a letter in the box addressed to him. He put it in his pocket and walked on through the square past the band stand, crossed the railroad tracks and went up the street, which narrowed, as all the streets did, into the miners' paths, until he reached the building belonging to another of his father's mines.

The pumps were still going, although some of the men had threatened to pull them out. There were only six men still at work in the engine house. Stuart walked up to a favorite seat on a great stone which cropped out on the hill. One of the few old pines still left on the slope grew close by.

He sat down and took out the letter. It was from Eric. As he read his face darkened.

Dear Stuart—the letter began with the old familiar sound—I write to you because I have been refused admission to the house. I called twice this week to inquire for you, and the servants would not let me in. I don't blame you. The times are bringing many questions before us, and the rights of men as men are not to be ignored. I don't know that you care to keep up the old acquaintance. It rests with you to say. I don't know what a year may have done for you. The new situation may also make a change in your attitude toward me. I am doing what I believe is right. It may seem all wrong from your standpoint. If you will be at the old stone by the big tree this afternoon I shall meet you there. Your old friend,

Eric.

This was a most unsatisfactory letter to Stuart. The refusal to let Eric into the house angered him to a white heat. He could not understand it unless the servants were acting under his father's orders. He flushed red and then turned white at the thought. It was not like Ross Duncan to do such a thing. And yet he might do it. And then the rest of the letter—it was not like the old Eric he had known, and yet the one great love of Stuart had been and still was his love for Eric. It was not because Eric had once saved his life. He would have loved him in any case, but the years had brought changes, the past year particularly.

"I have just been reading your letter," said Stuart.

He had been reading and brooding with head bent down, and now, as he raised it, he saw Eric coming up the hill.

The two men met with the commonplace salutations: "How are you, Eric?" "How are you, Stuart?" They shook hands stiffly and then sat down on the rock. Each seemed a little shy of the other.

Stuart was the first to speak. He knew from experience that Eric would never say the first word.

"I have just been reading your letter. There is some mistake about your being refused admission to the house. Father would never do such a thing, Eric."

"I'm not so sure of that. But I don't feel hurt on that account even if he would. Is he better?"

"Yes." Stuart paused. He did not seem to know what to say. It was harder to break over the gap of a year's growth in manhood than he had thought. Then he burst out with a short laugh:

"Oh, I say, Eric, what's the use for us to be sitting here like fools on this rock as if we were afraid of each other! In memory of the old days, will you put your hand on my shoulder and look me in the face?"

"It is not the same, Eric," said Stuart, with a sigh at last, letting his hand slip from the other's shoulder.

"A better one, I hope. The times have made me sober and gray."

"How is it, Eric? Is there any difference in your feeling toward me?"

"No." Eric was pushing the gravel with his foot and looking out over the valley. Then he looked Stuart frankly in the face and repeated his "No. But you are the one to change."

"I! What change has there been in me?" Stuart put the question almost indignantly.

"You have seen the world. What can I be to you now? More and more as the time goes on the difference must widen. You are a gentleman of wealth and leisure, and I am a workingman."

"You don't need to be, Eric. You could get ahead. You could command any place in time with your intelligence and and"—

Stuart hesitated for just the word, but Eric said quietly:

"I have chosen my place. A workingman I am, and a workingman I shall be as long as there are wrongs to right and rights to maintain."

"But what has all this to do with us, Eric? We have been over all this ground before. Do you not love me?"

"Indeed, truly I do." Eric turned his large dark eyes affectionately toward his friend.

"And do I not love you?"

"Yes," replied Eric simply. "But our lives are of necessity widening out farther apart. What can prevent that? In the very nature of the situation it could not be otherwise. Here I am advising thousands of men to a course which is directly opposed by your father and would be by you if you were in his place. The time is coming when the clash between your interests and mine will be so fierce that"—

Stuart jumped to his feet. "Do you mean to say, Eric, that friendship true

Recent experiments show that all classes of food may be completely digested by a preparation called Kodol Dyspepsia Cure, which absolutely digests what you eat. As it is the only combination of all the natural digestants ever devised the demand for it has become enormous. It has never failed to cure the very worst cases of indigestion and it always gives instant relief. W. A. Schreiter.

A powerful engine cannot be run with a weak boiler, and we can't keep up the strain of an active life with a weak stomach; neither can we stop the human machine to make repairs. If the stomach cannot digest enough food to keep the body strong, such a preparation as Kodol Dyspepsia Cure should be used. It digests what you eat and it simply can't help but do you good. W. A. THE FARTHEST NORTH

Men Who Placed Their Mark Nearest the Pole.

Perilous Feat Accomplished by the Duke of the Abruzzi and His Party—Particulars of the Exposition.

The duke of the Abruzzi and Capt. Cagni have furnished the data for an official report on their polar expedition which appears in the Italia Militare e Marina. The earlier stages of their experiences have already been told. What is new and interesting dates from February after their winter on Rudolf Island, 200 yards from the shore, where the ice in the bay had crushed in one of the sides of the Stella Polare and let in the water. The story has already been told of an excursion about Christmas time, when the duke and Cagni fell into a crevasse. The duke lost two fingers by frost bite and the doctor forbade him to undertake the command of the expedition over the ice toward the pole. Capt. Cagni started, however, on February 20, but the intense cold and consequent difficulty with the provisions compelled him to return almost immediately. On March 11 the expedition started again. It consisted of ten officers and men, with numerous dogs and some sledges and kayaks, says an eastern exchange.

After nine days' march, during which 43½ miles were made, Cagni, finding the provisions running short, sent back Lieut. Querini with two men. These three have not been heard of since. On March 31, when the sledge expedition had passed the eighty-third parallel, Dr. Cavalli-Molinelli was sent back with two men. They, with two sledges and 16 dogs, arrived safely at the main camp on April 24, having taken four days longer to return than to go. Cagni, in the meantime, continued his journey with three of the Italian Alpine guides Canepa, Fenoillet and Petigax. Cagni worked on an equality with his companions and at night they all shared the one sleeping sack of reindeer skin. They had the advantage now of having the sun always with them. The ice softened and their way became easier. They ate their provisions as long as they lasted and then commenced to kill the dogs for food in order to live, or rather in order to attain their object. They were able to increase their speed to nine and a half miles per day and at last they reached Nansen's farthest north, 86 degrees 14 minutes. After a long and careful observation to make sure of this they passed beyond, and on April 26, 1900, they touched 86 degrees 33 minutes N. at about 56 degrees E., when they decided to turn back. No land was in sight, nothing but ice in a state of thaw. Petermann's land, which Payer believed he saw, did not exist where he stated, otherwise Cagni would have seen it early in his journey. The same is said of King Oscar land, which would otherwise have been seen on the return march.

Toward the end of May the four adventurers found themselves at the eighty-second parallel, but the condition of the ice had compelled them to keep too far to the west. On June 8 they made Harley and Ommaney islands, having passed Rudolf island without observing it. They now made the best of their way east, then northeast, and finally reached the main camp in good health on June 23 with two sledges and seven remaining dogs.

The Stella Polare still remained above the ice and Capt. Cagni succeeded in repairing her sufficiently for the return voyage, which commenced on August 15. It was highly improbable that the vessel would have withstood another winter in the ice. Two years' provisions were left at the camp in the forlorn hope that the three missing men might still return. On August 17 the Stella Polare was blocked by the ice in the British channel and remained there 13 days, but on August 30, the thirteenth day, she reached Jackson's station at Cape Flora. Six days later she was at Hammerfest, having run great danger of destruction by icebergs when 30 miles from the European mainland. On September 11 the duke and Cagni arrived at Christiania, and on September 14 they were in Turin.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE ON FILING PETITION TO SELL LAND.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake } ss.

Special Term
Feb. 20th 1901.

In the matter of the estate of Isidore Therleault deceased. On reading and filing the petition of Benjamin Bolber, executor of the estate of Isidore Therleault, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, (excepting the homestead), of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate with their residences, and praying that license be to him granted to sell the real estate of Isidore Therleault in said county.

And it appearing by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said Executor to pay said debts, legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary, for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell all of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Monday the 18th day of March A. D. 1901, at ten o'clock a. m., at the court house in Red Lake Falls, in said county, then and there to show cause, (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Benjamin Bolber to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Gazette, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls in said county.

SEED WHEAT

We have selected some very choice seed wheat, that we will sell or exchange. We have both pure Scotch Fife and Blue Stem, and it is free from all foul seed, cleaned ready for a seeder. This wheat was raised in the bottom lands near the Red River of the North, and is about as fine a sample of wheat as we have ever seen. We have tested samples of the wheat that has been damaged by rain and find that about only forty or fifty per cent of it will grow, and when it does grow it makes a very puny and inferior straw. As a matter of fact there are very few farmers who appreciate the value of a change of seed. They will go on year after year seeding the old, run out, cockly seed, when a good strong seed gives them from 2 to 3 bushels per acre more and it does not cost any more to plow, harrow, seed or harvest, and they would have a good seed wheat of their own the following year. Sample of this seed wheat can be seen at our office or at the Crompe Elevator.

Arms and The Woman

when the prince, followed by Von Walden, entered.

"Pardon me," he said, "for having made you wait."

"Permit me," said I, rising, "to present my second, Mr. Pembroke, his highness Prince Ernst of Wortumberg."

And the four of us left the inn and crossed the field. The first shot fell to me. Pembroke's eyes beamed with exultant light. Von Walden's face was without expression. As for the prince, he still wore that haunting smile. He was confident of the end. He knew that I was a tyro, whereas he had faced death many times.

I sighed. I knew that I should not aim to take his life. I was absolutely without emotion. There was not the slightest tremble in my hand as I accepted the pistol. There is nothing like set purpose to still the tremors of a man's nerves. I thought of Hillars, and for a moment my arm stiffened; then I recalled Gretchen's last letter. I fell to wondering where the bullet would hit me. I prayed that his aim might be sure.

"Many persons think that I am a man without compassion," said the prince, as we were about to step to our places. "I have an abundance of it. You have everything to lose, and I have nothing to gain. If it is your desire, I shall be happy to exchange [illegible] you wish to withdraw. But say the word."

"[illegible] what my reply would be? Withdraw," said I, "and have you laugh at me and tell your friends that I acted the poltroon? Really, you do [illegible]."

"And do you hate me so very much?" [illegible] in his eyes.

"[illegible] I did hate you, but hatred is a thing we should not waste any more than love. I have taken the kindest from your hands; that is enough. You are merely an object for scorn and contempt and [illegible] now. No, I have no wish to withdraw."

"You read between the lines," he said. "Indeed, I should like nothing better than to have the privilege of calling you a poltroon and a coward and [illegible] your princess at it." He [illegible] back to his place leisurely.

"[illegible] slightest to the left," whispered Pembroke; "the wind will carry it home."

I pressed his hand. A moment later I stood facing the prince. I lifted the pistol and fired. Had the prince been ten feet to the right he must have been hit. I threw the smoking pistol aside, let my arms fall and waited. I could see that Pembroke was losing his [illegible] anxiety and disappointment. Slowly the prince leveled the weapon at my breast. Naturally I shut my eyes. Perhaps there was a prayer on my lips. God, how long that was [illegible]. It became so tedious that I [illegible] my eyes again. The pistol and the prince appeared to have frozen.

"It is getting cold," I cried. "Shoot, for God's sake shoot, and end it!"

In reply the prince fired into the air, took the pistol by the barrel and flung it at my feet. The rest of us looked on [illegible].

"They are all of the same kidney, these Americans," said he. "They would be dangerous as a nation were it not for their love of money." Then to me: "Go tell your princess that I have given your life to you."

"The devil take you!" I cried. The strain had been terrible.

"All in good time," returned the prince, getting into his coat and furs. "Yesterday morning I had every intention of killing you. This morning it was farthest from my thoughts, though I did hope to see you waver. You are a man of courage. So was your friend. It is to be regretted that we were on different sides. Devil take the women! Good morning!"

After the count had gathered up the pistols the two walked toward the inn. Pembroke and I followed them at a distance.

"I wonder if he had any idea of what a good shot you were?" mused Pembroke. "It was a very good target."

"I aimed ten feet to the right," said I.

"What?"

"Yes."

"Then you knew"—

"Pembroke," said I, "I had no intention of killing him or even wounding him. And I never expected to leave this place alive. Something has occurred during the last 24 hours which we do not understand."

"He was taking great risks."

"It shows the man he is," said I, and the remainder of the distance was gone in silence.

The carriages were in the road a short way from the inn. Pembroke and I got into ours. As the prince placed a foot on the step of his he turned once more to me.

"Pardon me," he said, "but I came near forgetting to tell you why I did not kill you this morning. In some way your princess came into the knowledge that we were going to fight it out as they did in the old days. She came to my rooms and there begged me to spare your life. There was a condition. It was that she get down on her knees to me—down on her knees. Ah, what was your life compared to the joy of her humiliation! Not in the figure of speech—on her living, mortal knees, my friend—her living knees!" The carriage door banged behind him.

It was only because Pembroke threw his arms around me that I did not leap out of the carriage.

"Sit still, Jack, sit still! If she begged your life, it was because she loves you."

And, full of rage, I saw the carriage of the prince vanish. As the carriage vanished, so vanished the prince from the scene of my adventures.

Arriving at our rooms, we found them in possession of a lieutenant of the guard hussars. He was drumming on the hearthstone with the end of his sword scabbard. As we entered he rose and briefly saluted us.

"Which of you two gentlemen is Herr Winthrop?" he asked.

"I am he," said I.

"His majesty commands your immediate presence at the palace."

"The king?"

"Yes."

At the palace the chancellor met me in the anteroom. His face was grave almost to gloominess.

"Have you ever seen a king angry?" he asked. "Ah, it is not a pleasant sight, on my word; least of all to the one who has caused a king anger."

"You alarm me," I said. "Have I done aught to bring the anger of the king upon my head?"

"Ah, but you have! The king is like a bear in his den. He walks back and forth, waving his hands, pulling his mustache and muttering dire threats."

"Might I not take to my legs?" I asked. After all, I cared more than I thought I should in regard to what the king might do to me.

The chancellor gave my back a sounding thump and roared with laughter.

"Cheerful, my son; be cheerful! You are a favorite already."

"You bewilder me."

"You have powerful friends, and if the king is angry you need have no fear."

"I should like to know"— I began.

"Ah," interrupted the chancellor, "the audience is ended. It is our turn. The Austrian embassador," he whispered as a gray haired man passed us, bowing. There was an exchange of courtesies, and once more I stood before the king.

"There was a condition. It was that she get down on her knees to me."

"I believe you have kept me waiting," said the king, "as Louis once said." He gazed at me from under knotted eyebrows. "I wish," petulantly, "that you had remained in your own country."

"So do I, your majesty," I replied honestly.

The chancellor shook with laughter, and the king glared at him furiously.

"What is your name?" asked the king in a milder tone. He was holding a missive in his hand.

"John Winthrop," I answered. I was wondering what it was all about.

"Were you born in America?"

"Yes, your majesty."

"Is your family an honored one in your country?"

"It is," I answered proudly.

"Then why in heaven's name do you scribble?" cried the king.

"In my country one may have an honored name and still be compelled to earn a competence."

"Ah, yes! After all, scribbling is better than owning a shop." This is the usual argument of kings. "Can you trace your pedigree very far back?" the king proceeded.

"My ancestors came over in the Mayflower," said I.

"The Mayflower?" said the king, puzzled.

"All the Americans," explained the chancellor, "went over in the Mayflower. The ark and the Mayflower were the largest ships ever put to sea, your majesty." To hide his smile the chancellor passed over to the window and began drawing pictures on the frosted panes.

Continued the king: "If you loved one of my countrywomen, would you be willing to sacrifice your own country? I mean would you be willing to adopt mine, to become a naturalized citizen, to uphold its laws, to obey the will of its sovereign and to take up arms in its defense?"

My knees began to knock together. "I should be willing," I answered, "if I should never be called upon to bear arms against the country in which I was born."

"I should never ask you to do that," replied the king.

"Yes, your majesty."

"Then marry the Princess Elizabeth," he said, tossing the missive to me.

"Yes, marry her," said the irrepressible chancellor, "and some day the king will put a medal on your breast and make you a baron of the realm. Your majesty, come and help me with this last pane."

The Princess Elizabeth? I glanced at the writing on the envelope. It was Gretchen's. "And, your majesty," I read, "it is true that they love each other. Permit them to be happy. I ask your forgiveness for all the trouble I have caused you. I promise that from now on I shall be the most obedient subject in all your kingdom. Hildegarde." I dropped the letter on the table.

"Your majesty," I began nervously, "there is some mistake. I do not love her highness the Princess Elizabeth."

The king and his chancellor whirled around. The decorations on the panes remained unfinished. The king regarded me with true anger and the chancellor with dismay.

"I love the Princess Hildegarde," I went on in a hollow voice.

"Is this a jest?" demanded the king.

"No; on my honor." For once I forgot court etiquette and left off "your majesty."

"Let me see the letter," said the chancellor, with a pacific purpose. "There is some misunderstanding here." He read the letter and replaced it on the table and went back to his window.

"Perhaps, your majesty," said I, "it is possible that her highness—the likeness between her and her sister—perhaps, knowing that I have known her highness Phyllis—that is, the Princess Elizabeth—she may believe that I"— It was very embarrassing.

"Continue," said the king, "and please make your sentences intelligible."

"What I meant to say was that her highness the Princess Hildegarde believes that I love her sister instead of herself—I thought—she has written otherwise"— And then I foundered again.

"Prince," said the king, laughing in spite of his efforts to appear angry, "for pity's sake tell me what this man is talking about."

"A woman," said the chancellor. "Perhaps her highness the Princess Hildegarde—that is, I believe—she may love this man—perhaps, thinking he loves the other"— He was mocking me, and my face burned.

"Prince, do not confuse the man. He is bad enough as it is." The king smoothed away the remnant of the smile.

"Your majesty is plain," said I desperately. "I am confused. I know not what to say."

"What would you do in my place?" asked the king of the chancellor.

"I should say in an ominous voice: 'Young man, you may go, but if you ever enter our presence again without either one or the other of the Hohenphallan princesses as your wife we shall confiscate your property and put you in a dungeon for the remainder of your natural days.' I put in the confiscation clause as a matter of form. Have you any property?"

"What I have," I answered, my confidence returning, "I can put in my pockets."

"Good," said the king. "What the chancellor says is but just. See to it that his directions are followed."

"Now, my king," concluded the chancellor, "put a medal on him and let him go."

"In time," replied the king. "You may go, Herr Winthrop."

"Go and scribble no more," added the chancellor.

I could hear them laughing as I made my escape from the room. It could not be expected of me to join them. And Gretchen was as far away as ever. Phyllis love me? It was absurd. Gretchen had played me the fool. She had been laughing at me all the time. Yet she had begged my life of the prince and on her knees. Or was it a lie of his? Oh, it seemed to me that my brain would never become clear again.

In the afternoon at 4 I was ushered into the boudoir of her highness the Princess Elizabeth. It was Phyllis no longer. Phyllis had passed, and I became conscious of a vague regret.

"I am glad," she said, "that you were able to come. I wanted to speak to you about—about my sister."

"Your highness"—

She laughed. "Our interview shall end at once if you call me by that title. Sir," with a gayety which struck me as unnatural, "you are witnessing the passing of Phyllis. It will not be long before she shall pass away and never more return, and the name shall fade till it becomes naught but a dear memory. Phyllis has left the green pastures for the city, and Corydon followeth not."

"Phyllis," said I, "you are cutting me to the heart."

"But to the matter at hand," she said quickly. "There is a misunderstanding between you and my sister Hildegarde. She sent me this letter. Read it."

It differed but little from the one I had read in the king's chamber that morning. I gave it back to her.

"Do you understand?"

"I confess that I do not. It seems that I am never going to understand anything again."

Phyllis balanced the letter on the palm of her hand. "You are so very blind, my dear friend. Did you not tell her that there had been another affair? Do you not believe she thinks your regard for her merely a matter of pique, of consolation? It was very kind of her to sacrifice herself for me. Some women are willing to give up all to see the man they love made happy. My sister is one of those. But I shall refuse the gift. Jack, can you not see that the poor woman thinks that you love me?" Phyllis was looking at me with the greatest possible kindness.

"I know not what she thinks. I only know that she has written me that she is sorry for having played with my affections. Phyllis, if she loved me she would not leave me as she has done."

"Oh, these doubting Thomases!" exclaimed Phyllis. "How do you know that she does not love you? Have you one true proof that she does not? No, but you have a hundred that she does."

"But"—

"Do you love her?" demanded Phyllis, stamping her foot with impatience.

"Love her? Have I not told you that I do?" gloomily.

"And will you give her up because she writes you a letter? What has ink to do with love and a woman? If you do not set out at once to find her, I shall never forgive you. She is my sister, and by that I know that you cannot win her by sitting still. Go find her and tell her that you will never leave her till she is your wife. I do not mean to infer," with a smile, "that you will leave her after. Go to her as a master. That is the way a woman loves to be wooed. Marry her and be happy, and I shall come and say, 'Heaven bless you, my children.' I have accepted the renunciation of her claims so that she may be free to wed you. If you do not find her, I will. Since I have her promise to teach me the lesson of being a princess she cannot have gone far. And when you are married you will promise to visit me often? I shall be very lonely now. I shall be far away from my friends. I shall be in a prison, and men call it a palace."

"I will promise you anything you may ask," I said eagerly. A new hope and a new confidence had risen in my heart. I wonder where man got the idea that he is lord of creation when he depends so much upon woman?

"And you will really be my sister, too!" taking her hands and kissing them.

"And you will think of me a little, will you not?"

"Yes." She slowly withdrew her hands. "If you do not find her, write to me."

"Your highness, it is my hope that some day you will meet a prince who will be worthy of you, who will respect and honor you as I do."

"Who can say? You have promised the king to become a subject of Hohenphalia."

"Yes."

"Then you will be a subject of mine. It is my will—I am in a sovereign mood—that you at once proceed to find Hildegarde, and I will give her to you."

"Auf wiedersehen!"

"Goodby!"

My ear detected the barest falter in her voice, and something glistened on her eyelashes. Ah, why could not the veil have remained before my eyes and let me gone in darkness? Suddenly I was looking across the chasm of years. There was a young girl in white, a table upon which stood a pitcher. It was a garden scene, and the air was rich with perfumes. The girl's hair and eyes were brown, and there were promises of great beauty. Then, as swiftly as it came, the vision vanished.

On reaching the street I was aware that my sight had grown dim and that things at a distance were blurred. Perhaps it was the cold air.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Immediately Pembroke and I journeyed to the feudal inn. When we arrived, a mixture of rain and snow was falling. But I laughed at that. What if I were drenched to the skin with cold rain and snow, my heart was warm, warmer than it had been in many a day. Woman is infallible when she reads the heart of another. Phyllis said that Gretchen loved me. It only remained for me to find her.

"Where is the innkeeper?" I asked, my heart sinking.

"He is not here," was the answer.

"Is her highness the Princess Hildegarde"—

"Her highness?" he cried in astonishment. "She has never been here. This is an inn. The castle is in the village."

"How long have you been here?" asked Pembroke.

"Two weeks, your highness." Doubtless he thought us to be high personages to be inquiring for the princess.

"Is Stahlberg here?" I asked.

"He is visiting relatives in Coburg," was the answer.

"Do you know where her highness is?"

"No." It occurred to me that his voice had taken to sullen tones.

"When will the innkeeper be back?"

The fellow shrugged his shoulders. "I cannot say, your highness. The inn is not open for guests till March."

"Jack," said Pembroke in English, "it is evident that this fellow has been instructed to be close lipped. Let us return to the village. The castle is left." He threw some coins to the servant, and they rattled along the porch. "Come!" And we wheeled and trotted away.

I cannot tell how great was my disappointment, nor what I did or said. The ride back to the village was a [illegible], so far as conversation went. At the castle we found not a soul.

"It is as I expected," said Pembroke. "Remember that her highness is accustomed to luxury and that it is not likely for her to spend her winter in such a deserted place. You're a newspaper man. You ought to be full of resources. Why don't you telegraph to all the news agencies and make inquiries? She is a personage, and it will not be difficult to find her if you go at it the right way."

I followed his advice, and the first return brought me news. Gretchen was at present in Vienna. So we journeyed to Vienna futilely. Then commenced a dogged, persistent search. I dragged my cousin hither and thither about the kingdom, from village to train, from train to city, till his life became a burden to him and his patience threadbare. At Hohenphalia the capital, we were treated coldly. We were not known. They were preparing the palace for the coronation of her serene highness the Princess Elizabeth. The Princess Hildegarde might be in Brussels.

At Brussels her highness was in Munich, at Munich she was in Heidelberg and so on and so on. It was truly discouraging. The vaguest rumor brought me to the railway, Pembroke, laughing and grumbling, always at my heels. At last I wrote to Phyllis. It was the one hope left. Her reply was to the effect that she, too, did not know where her sister was, that she was becoming a puzzle to her and concluded with the advice to wait till the coronation, when Gretchen would put in an appearance, her presence being imperative. So weeks multiplied and became months, winter passed, the snows fell from the mountains, the floods rose and subsided, summer was at hand with her white boughs and green grasses. May was blooming into June. Still Gretchen remained in obscurity.

"I shall be a physical wreck," said Pembroke when we finally returned to B——, "if you keep this up much longer."

"Look at me!" was my gloomy rejoinder.

"Well, you have that interesting pallor," he admitted, "which women ascribe to lovers."

Thrusting my elbows on the table, I buried my chin in my hands and stared. After awhile I said, "I do not believe she wants to be found."

"That has been my idea this long while," he replied, "only I did not wish to make you more despondent than you were."

One morning when I had grown outwardly calm I said to Pembroke, "Phillip, I shall go with you to India."

"Here is a letter for you," he replied. "It may change your plans."

My mail since leaving the journalistic field had become so small that to receive a letter was an event. Inside of the envelope I discovered only six words, but they meant all the world to me. "She is here at the inn." It was unsigned. I waved the slip of paper before Pembroke's eyes.

"She is found!" I cried.

"Then go in search of her," he said.

"And you will go with me?"

"Not I! I prefer tigers to princesses. By the way, here is an article in the Zeitung on the coming coronation of her serene highness the Princess Elizabeth of Hohenphalia. I'm afraid that I shan't be present to witness the event." He thrust the paper into my hands and approached the window, out of which he leaned and stared at the garden flowers below. "When I asked her why it could not be, she answered that she had no love to give in return for mine."

"She may change her mind," I said, putting a hand on his. "Most women do."

"But there are exceptions," he replied, regarding me with earnest eyes as if to read what was going on behind mine. "There are some women who never change. Her highness is one of these. As I remarked before, she has no love to give me. It is gone, and as it is gone without reward she will make no attempt to recall it to give to another. I love her all the more for that. The game fate plays with our hearts is a cruel one. For one affinity there are ten unfinished lives. Her highness loves a good man."

My hand fell from his, and I went over to the window. This was the first intimation he had given to me that he knew the secret, the secret which had made me so sad, the secret which I tried not to believe.

"You are determined to go to India?" I said without turning my head. I could find no other words.

"Yes. It will be the best thing in the world."

"You will promise to write?"

"Whenever I strike the post. Marry and be happy. It is the lot of the few."

That night he started for Bombay by the way of England, and the next morning I put out for the feudal inn.

CHAPTER XXV.

I was passing along the highway, a pipe between my teeth. It was the beginning of twilight, the trysting hour of all our reveries, when the old days come back with a perfume as sweet and vague as that which hovers over a jar of spiced rose leaves. I was thinking of the year which was gone; how I first came to the inn; of the hour when I first held her in my arms and kissed her and vowed my love to her; of the parting, when she of her own will had thrown her arms about my neck and confessed.

The inn loomed up against the sky gray and lonely. Behind me, far away down the river I could catch occasional glimpses of the lamps of the village. Presently there came a faint yellow glow in the east, and I knew that Diana was approaching.

She tosses loose her locks upon the night
And through the dim wood Dian threads her way.

A wild sweetness filled the air. I was quite half a mile from the inn, yet I could smell the odor of her roses—Gretchen's roses. It was a long and weary year which had intervened. And now she was there, only a short way from my arms. But she did not know that I was coming. A million diamonds sprang into the air whenever I struck the lush grasses with my cane. Everywhere I breathed the perfume of her roses. They seemed to hide along the hedges, to lurk among the bushes, red roses and white. On the hill across the valley I saw the little cemetery with its white stones. I arrested my steps and took off my hat. The dust of Hillars lay there. I stood motionless for some time. I had loved the man as it is possible for one man to love another. I had not thought of him much of late, but in this life we cannot always stand by the grave of those who have gone before. He had loved Gretchen with a love perhaps less selfish than mine, for he had sacrificed his life uselessly for her that she might—be mine! Mine! I thought.

The lights of the inn cheered me and lifted the gloom. Should I enter by stealth or boldly? I chose the second method. Gretchen and the innkeeper were in the old hall. I entered and threw my traps into a corner. As they turned and saw me consternation was written on their faces.

"I have found you at last," I said, holding out a hand to each of them. The innkeeper thrust his hands behind his back and sauntered leisurely toward the window. Gretchen showed signs of embarrassment, and her eyes were studiously fixed on the cracks which yawned here and there in the floor. My hands fell unnoticed.

"You have been looking for us?" she asked in even tones. "Why have you?"

Vaguely I gazed at her, at the innkeeper, then at my traps in the corner. It was apparent that I was an intruder. I struck my forehead in anger and despair. Triple fool that I was! I was nothing to her. She had told me so, and I had not believed.

"Yes; why?" asked the innkeeper, turning around.

"I believe," said I, my voice trembling, "that I am an unwelcome guest. Is it not so?"

"Oh, as for that," said the innkeeper, observing Gretchen, "this is a public inn on the highway. All wayfarers are of necessity welcome."

"Go, then, and prepare me a supper," said I. "I am indeed hungry, having journeyed far." I wanted him out of the room.

The innkeeper, a puzzling smile on his lips, passed out.

"Gretchen," I burst forth, "in heaven's name what does this mean? I have hunted for you day after day, week after week, month after month. I have traveled the four ends of the continent. I have lived—oh, I do not know how I have lived! And when I do find you it is to this." My voice broke, and I was positively on the verge of tears.

"And was all this fair to her?" asked Gretchen coldly.

"To her? I do not understand."

"I mean, was all this fair to my sister?"

"Gretchen," a light piercing the darkness, "has she not written to you?"

"A long time ago. She wanted to see me on an important matter, but I could not change my plans at the time. I shall see her at the palace next week. Ought you not to be with her instead of here?"

"Why should I be with her?"

Gretchen laughed, but the key was false.

"Are you not going to marry her? Surely it is easy after the king has given his permission. Have you already fallen out of love with her after all your efforts to make her a princess? Truly man is as unstable as sand and water. Ah, but you fooled us all to the top of your bent. You knew from the first that she was a princess, but you could not find the goods. Hermann and I were the means to the end. But who shall blame you? Not I. I am very grateful to you for having given to me a sister. And if you fooled me I returned measure for measure. It is game and quits. The game is heavy on my hands, and the victory, however short, was amusing."

"I never loved her!" I cried. "Where were the words I needed?"

"So much the worse for you," disdainfully. "But here comes Hermann to announce your supper."

"I shall not break the bread of inhospitality," said I in the bitterness of my despair. I gathered up my traps and then I let them tumble back. The needed words came with a rush to my lips. I went close to her. "Why did you humiliate yourself in begging my life of the prince? Why, if my life was nothing to you? Answer. Why did you stoop to your knees to that man if I was worthless to you? Why?"

Her cheeks grew red, then white. Her lips formed words which she could not speak.

"Herr Winthrop's supper is ready," announced the innkeeper.

"Go and eat it!" I said childishly.

"Your appetite is gone then?" imperturbably.

"Yes, and get you gone with it!"

The innkeeper surveyed her for a space. "Will you kindly tell me from whom you received the information that her highness was at the inn?"

I produced the unsigned letter. He read it carefully, while Gretchen looked on nervously.

"Ach," said the innkeeper. "But Stahlberg! He should be dismissed."

Unhappily for him that individual was just passing along the corridor. The innkeeper signaled him to approach.

"How dared you?" began the innkeeper, thrusting the letter under Stahlberg's nose.

"Dare? I? Herr," said the big fellow, "I do not understand. What is it you accuse me of?"

"This!" cried the innkeeper. "You have written to Herr Winthrop and told him that her highness was at the inn. And you were expressly forbidden to do so."

Stahlberg looked around blankly. "I swear in heaven, herr"—

"Do not prevaricate," the innkeeper interrupted. "You know that you wrote this."

"Stahlberg," I cried excitedly, "tell me why you wrote this note to me and I'll see that you are taken care of the rest of your days."

"I forbid him!" commanded Gretchen in alarm.

WANTS IT KNOWN

CAPT. MCGRAIN'S LIFE WAS SAVED AND HE IS GRATEFUL.

WANTS THE GAZETTE TO TELL THE STORY OF HIS RESCUE.

Capt. Jas. McGrain is a well known resident of this section. His home is at 707 Cowing street, Crookston, and he has been in this city many times on his way up to Red Lake where he has in the past been captain of the steamer Martin Lally, plying the lake. In the summer of 1898 he fell ill, being bothered with dizzy spells to such an extent that he had several slight accidents as a result. In fact he had about given up hope, when he discovered he had on the steamer several packages of Kola Celery Tea which had been purchased at Schreiter's drug store, along with other medicines. He resolved to try it, and the results were simply marvelous. It made him a well man; and the captain in his enthusiasm requested the following affidavit published, for the good of humanity:

Capt. Jas. McGrain, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that in the summer of 1898 he fell ill. Had dizzy spells, head drooping, pains in back, nervous, and could not sleep. Seemed to be a physical wreck. Kola Celery Tea relieved all this, permanently. Before taking it he could not even sign his name, and although he was prejudiced against it, he is glad to tell of the good it has done him. Twelve or fourteen others used it with benefits to his knowledge. Will do any one good. All these people praise it, and he cannot recommend it too highly.

Signed—James McGrain.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Red Lake Falls, Red Lake Co., Minn.

MUST BUILD DEPOTS.

SEPARATE WAITING ROOMS FOR MEN AND WOMEN IN PLACES OF 1,000 INHABITANTS.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 26.—Under the provisions of a bill in the senate all railroads are compelled to establish depots and agents at all towns on their lines from which they receive an income of $8,000 or more per year. When the population of a town is more than 1,000 separate waiting rooms must be provided for men and women, and the bill provides in detail the size of the building and of these waiting rooms. A waiting station must be provided in every town or village through which a railroad line runs. Under the present law there is no provision for depots in all towns and agents are required only in towns where the revenue to the road exceeds $15,000.

The Popular Buffalo Route

This summer on account of the 1901 Pan-American Exposition will be the Nickel Plate Road. Countless thousands will visit this one of the greatest expositions of modern times. The Nickel Plate Road will be the popular line. The excellence of its service is well recognized by the travelling public, and the reputation of its train employes in their uniform courtesy to passengers is well known. When you go East see that your tickets read via the Nickel Plate Road. Write, wire, 'phone or call on John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

A SNAG

THE REAPPORTIONMENT COMMITTEE HAS ONE IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 25.—The reapportionment committee is having trouble with Minneapolis. The county has more people than necessary for one congressman and there are several plans to make a change, none of which appear satisfactory to all concerned. One is to cut out the country districts outside the city, and another is to use the river as a dividing line. The politicians do not favor the first plan and the people object to the second, so it is probable that neither will be adopted.

LEGISLATIVE JUNKET

THE FIRST WAS TAKEN TO RED WING TO VISIT THE REFORM SCHOOL.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 25.—The first legislative junket was taken Tuesday by the members to Red Wing where committees investigated the reform school. Many other members of the legislature went with the committees and were entertained by the people of the town.

Married.

The editor is in receipt of a wedding announcement, which gives the interesting information of the marriage, at Newfane, N. Y., on Feb. 18th, of Miss Victoria LaFreniere, formerly of this city, to Mr. Thos. Jefferson McKee, a wealthy fruit grower of the town of Newfane, Niagara Co., N. Y. They will be at home at the Branker Homestead, Newfane, after the 15th of March.

WOULD REDUCE.

EXPENSES OF DECAPITATING THE CHIEF GRAIN INSPECTATOR.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 26.—Mr. Riley of Jackson county has introduced a bill to abolish the office of chief grain inspectator and thereby save $2,500 a year. The bill places the work of the chief inspector in the hands of the railroad and warehouse commission. He says the chief inspectors principal duty is to draw a good salary for doing nothing. He claims the only work done by the office is the compilation of reports submitted by deputy inspectors and that that work can be done as well in the office of the railroad and warehouse commission, where it finally goes, without additional cost to the state. There will be a hard fight put up against this bill, similar to the one being waged against the Hurd oil inspector's salary reduction bill. If these two bills pass there will be no way to pay political debts and some of the politicians will have to work for love of party or secure cash when goods are delivered. It may be the means of driving some of them out of politics.

Be Sure To Remember

That the popular Pan-American Exposition Route this summer will be the Nickel Plate Road, the shortest line between Chicago and intermediate points and Buffalo. No excess fare is charged on any of its Peerless Trio of fast express trains and American Club meals ranging in price from 35 cents to $1.00 are served in all its dinning car. Palatial thru vestibuled sleeping cars and modern day coaches with uniformed colored porters in attendance on the wants of the passengers. The acme of comfort and convenience in travelling is attained throught the superb service and competent equipment found on the Nickel Plate Road. Write, wire, 'phone or call on John Y. Callahan,

THE BUTTER SHOW

THE NATIONAL BUTTER-MAKERS' ASSOCIATION MET LAST WEEK.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb 25.—Between 6,000 and 7,000 buttermakers and dealers attended the National Association of Creamery Buttermakers in St. Paul last week. About 800 samples of butter have been submitted in the contests for prizes. The machinery exhibit was a magnificent affair. The convention in the past has been a very good thing for the butter industries and this year's convention is more successful than any held in the past. For three successive years Minnesota has taken the grand prize for butter.

UNDER ONE BOARD

THE GOVERNOR HAS WRITTEN A MESSAGE ADVOCATING THE PROPOSITION.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 25. There is every probability that the general board of control bill will pass the legislature and that thereafter all of the institutions will be under the charge of a single board as in practice in many other Western states. The commission appointed by Gov. Van Sant, to look into the matter in other states has reported in favor of the bill and Gov. Van Sant has written a special message to the legislature advocating the passage of the bill.

EXAMINING BOARD.

IT IS THOUGHT THIS WOULD RAISE THE VALUE OF GRAIN GRADES.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 26.—A bill for a board of examiners to pass on the fitness of the employes of the state grain and warehouse commission has been introduced in the house. It will pass unless the lobby is strong enough to defeat it. The object of the bill is to insure the employment of competent men as inspectors of grain and flax. It is thought that the passage of the measure and the appointment of a good board would raise the value of the grain grades in the state.

AFTER WINE ROOMS

MINISTERS AND TEMPERANCE PEOPLE MAKING AN AGGRESSIVE CAMPAIGN.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 25.—The anti-wine room bill is creating much discussion and every member of the legislature is besieged by ministers and temperance people in general to support the bill. A crusade similar to the one in Washington against the army canteen is being made, and it is more than likely that the bill would be passed even if the members of the legislature did not think that it was a good thing.

Numerous Applications.

St. Paul, Feb. 26.—The trustees of the Odd Fellow's home at Northfield will meet in St. Paul Wednesday to select a superintendent for the home, the place now being vacant. There are more than thirty applications for the place.

TAX SALE FOR MAY

A BILL HAS BEEN INTRODUCED FOR CLEARING UP TAXES FOR 1899.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 25.—If the bill now before the legislature passes the state will have another forfeited tax sale in May. The bill has been introduced for the purpose of clearing up the taxes for 1899 which are not paid, and the chances are that the success of the sale last year will make this cleaning up an annual affair.

NEW RAILROAD.

LINE IS BEING SURVEYED BETWEEN ST. PAUL AND FARIBAULT.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 25. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern will run into St. Paul next summer. Surveyors are now busy laying out the line between St. Paul and Faribault, where the new road now ends, and it is certain that before fall the road will be running trains into St. Paul. The addition of the new road may have an effect on freight rates from the East and South.

BECOMES A LAW.

THE TAX COMMISSION BILL HAS PASSED AND IS NOW A LAW.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 26.—The most important measure to become a law so far this session is the Underleak tax commission bill, which provides for the appointment of a commission of three at salaries of $3,000 a year, their total appropriations to be limited to $12,000, to reconstruct the tax laws. It is allowed until 1902 to report and the tax code it will furnish will be acted upon by the 1903 legislature. The commission will be appointed by the governor, state auditor and attorney general.

CHILDS AS CHAIRMAN

NAMES OF MEMBERS OF THE TAX COMMISSION SOON TO BE ANNOUNCED.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Service.

St. Paul, Feb. 25.—The names of the members of the tax commission which will be appointed to recodify the tax laws and report to the next session of the legislature has been selected by Gov. Van Sant, Attorney General Douglas and Auditor Dunn and they will be announced as soon as Mr. Douglas returns from Washington, where he has gone to argue several cases before the United States supreme court. It is said that Former Attorney General Henry W Childs of St. Paul will be chairman of the commission.

MINNESOTA AWARDS

STATE CAPTURES MANY PRIZES AT THE BUTTERMAKERS' NATIONAL MEETING.

Meeting to Arrange Uniform Tonnage Taxes for Lake Vessels—Northern Minnesota Mines in the Big Steel Combine—Former State Senator Whiteman Again in Trouble—Red Lake Reservation to Be Opened.

St. Paul, Feb. 25.—The ninth annual convention of the National Creamery Buttermakers' association has ended. The scoring of the judges in the butter contests shows that Kansas carried off the highest honor, winning the silk banner offered for the state securing the best average. The state averages announced were: Kansas, 89.44; Minnesota, 89.39; Illinois, 88.94; Iowa, 88.34; Wisconsin, 88.13; Michigan, 86.96; Vermont, 86.35.

Although Minnesota missed the banner, that state secured the highest individual award and three medals out of the four presented.

For "separator" butter the gold medal was given to E. O. Quenvold of Owatonna, Minn., who scored 97; silver metal to C. H. Jensen of Bernadotte, Minn., who scored 96 1-2. For "gathered cream" butter the gold medal went to W. C. Noble of South Waterford, Me., score 91; the silver medal to M. Magnusson of Bee, Minn., score 90 3-4.

The silver cups offered by the association were awarded to Marvin Powers of Corley, Ia., score 94.50; R. Sorenson of Utica, Wis., score 93.50; F. E. Barnett of Union, Ills., 93; O. L. Distad of De Smet, S. D., 93; William V. Beach of Charlotte, Vt., 93.50.

Of the 10 next exhibitors in order, following the four medal winners, nine were from Minnesota.

UNIFORM TONNAGE TAXES.

Wisconsin - Minnesota Commission Holds Its First Meeting.

St. Paul, Feb. 26.—The joint commission of the Minnesota and Wisconsin legislatures, appointed to confer with a view of securing uniform rates of vessel tonnage taxation for both states, met at the Windsor hotel and decided to present no bills until Michigan can be interested, and it can be determined whether or not the three states will adopt a uniform rate.

Since 1895 Minnesota has taxed vessels at the rate of 3 cents a ton, and her registry has largely increased. For the 19 years ending on July 31 the state received $10,932.77, practically clear gain, since the tax would have been in other states had not the rate been advantageous. More than 300 new registrations were recorded.

This increase in Minnesota was accompanied by an almost complete cessation of registration in Wisconsin, where vessels are taxed as personal property. Wisconsin soon appreciated the advance Minnesota was making, and the joint commission was asked for the purpose of devising means to again make that state a popular one from which to register.

MINNESOTA INTERESTED.

Lake Superior Mining Company in the New Steel Combine.

New York, Feb. 22.—The Herald says: Arrangements have been perfected by which the Lake Superior Consolidated Mining company and its associated interests will enter the great iron and steel combination which is being organized in New York city by J. P. Morgan. The Lake Superior Consolidated Mining company is capitalized at $3,000,000, and it represents the interests of J. D. Rockefeller in the Lake Superior region. This company practically controls the stock of the Duluth and Northern road, which runs from Duluth to Iron Mountain, in the Mesaba range. This road is the connecting link between the rich iron mines in the Mesaba range and Lake Superior. Interest attaches to the transaction because it indicates that the Rockefeller iron and steel properties have gone into the transaction.

In addition to this, The Herald announces definitely that Henry C. Frick has been made chairman of the directors of the new steel combination.

WHITEMAN AGAIN.

Former Minnesotan Arrested at the Waldorf-Astoria.

New York, Feb. 25.—Charged with grand larceny, Alonzo J. Whiteman, alias A. D. Wilson, was arrested in the Waldorf-Astoria by Detective Reidy of the central office. Whiteman gave his address as No. 261 West Thirty-third street.

With Whiteman was Edward Meyer, 50 years old, of Mills hotel, No. 1. There was no charge against him, but he was locked up with Whiteman at police headquarters.

In the opinion of Captain McClunkey, formerly chief of the detective bureau, Whiteman is the most skillful bank swindler in the United States.

OPEN THE RESERVATION.

Chippewas Will Sell Part of Their Red Lake Lands.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Feb. 22.—A council of the chiefs of the Red Lake Chippewas has decided to offer 11 townships at the west end of the reservation to the government to be sold at $2.50 an acre, the proceeds to be divided pro rata among members of the tribe. The remainder of the reservation is the fine fish and game country about Red lake. The proposal accords with Congressman Eddy's plan for opening the reservation.

SURPRISE FOR MINNESOTANS.

Secretary Hitchcock Given Control of Chippewa Timber Operations.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Members of the Minnesota delegation were surprised on examining the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill which had been adopted by the house, to find that it contained an amendment authorizing the secretary of the interior to dispose of the timber on the diminished Chippewa reservation at such prices and under such circumstances as he may prescribe. This gives the secretary absolute control over the timber, and under it he may adopt any plan for its disposal that he chooses. Members of the Minnesota delegation in the house express their disapproval of conferring such large powers on the secretary. The report has not been adopted in the senate. In case it becomes a law it is understood to be the intention of Secretary Hitchcock to adopt the plan of permitting mills on the reservations.

WINS A RICH BRIDE.

Minnesota Boy to Wed a Honolulu Heiress.

Honolulu, Feb. 12.—A soldier's romance became known yesterday when Miss Martha Afong boarded the government transport Lawton for Manila to meet her future husband. Special interest is given the affair by the prominence of the young woman. She is a member of the famous Afong family, and her fiance, Lieutenant A. J. Dougherty of the Seventeenth United States infantry, is now with his regiment in the Philippines.

The marriage will be military in character and will occur shortly after the arrival of Miss Afong. Lieutenant Dougherty is a Minnesotan, who met Miss Afong at her home in Honolulu about two years ago, when he was an officer in the Minnesota volunteers en route to the Philippines.

TO SETTLE LABOR DISPUTES.

Bill in the Minnesota Legislature for a Court of Arbitration.

St. Paul, Feb. 19.—Representative Johnson of Hennepin county has introduced in the house a bill creating a court of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between employers and employes who may be members of industrial unions. The court is given all the powers of an ordinary court of law and can enforce its own awards. Labor troubles are to come before it by stipulation of the parties to the dispute or by formal petition of either of them. The court has full authority to summon witnesses and insist on their testimony. The bill was ordered printed immediately and was referred to the committee on labor and labor legislation with instructions to report it to the house on or before March 4.

FOUND DEAD IN BED.

Demise of William Dawson, Sr., a Minnesota Pioneer.

St. Paul, Feb. 21.—William Dawson, Sr., was found dead in bed at his apartments in the building, Summit avenue and St. Albans street. Heart failure is assigned as the cause.

Deceased was among the early pioneers of the city, and for many years figured in the front rank of the men who built up St. Paul. He was the president of the Bank of Minnesota, and since the failure thereof he has not been seen much in public. His health was failing prior to the collapse of the bank, which, with assignment of the St. Paul Plow works, wiped away his entire fortune.

CROSSING COLLISION.

Great Northern Train Runs Into St. Louis Train at Hanley Falls.

Granite Falls, Minn., Feb. 22.—The westbound passenger train on the Great Northern came into collision with the westbound passenger train on the St. Louis line at the crossing near Hanley Falls at 3 o'clock p. m., badly wrecking the Great Northern engine and injuring several passengers on the St. Louis train. The Great Northern train was backed by a freight engine to this point and a wrecking crew is at work clearing the track.

DULUTH NORMAL BURNS.

New School Building Completely Gutted by Fire.

Duluth, Feb. 21.—The new $70,000 normal school building was gutted by fire. The origin of the fire is a mystery. Although the interior was not quite completed the building kept heated all winter, but the flames did not originate in the boiler room, where fires had been carefully banked late in the afternoon. Considerable uneasiness here as to what action the legislature will take towards rebuilding at once.

Archbishop Ireland Officiated.

Cincinnati, Feb. 21.—Miss Clara E. Longworth of Cincinnati and Count Adelbert de Chambrun of France were married at noon by Archbishop Ireland, a close friend of the bridegroom. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's mother, the widow of the late Judge Nicholas Longworth on Grandin Road, East Walnut Hills.

Mother and Child Burned.

Clarkfield, Minn., Feb. 21.—Mrs. C. J. Bree and her baby daughter were fatally burned by a gasoline stove explosion. The child died shortly after and the mother will live but a few hours.

Tax Commission Bill Passes.

St. Paul, Feb. 23.—The house has concurred in the senate amendments to the Laybourn tax commission bill and passed it as amended.

HORSES! HORSES!

Locomation has been a great subject in the past century, and will certainly puzzle many brains for all time to come. We have however, never gotten any further in solving the problem. Many traveler has often thought how convenient it would be to have wings so that one could fly from place to place. What a short distance twenty miles would be? Now, however, in the early dawn of the twentieth century as the bright sun of invention throws her acute beams over enlightened humanity, men are still wondering whether from the bosom of the century begun, there shall not rise some genius who shall invire the tired journeyist to sweep the dust from his boots in an aerial trip. It is reported that in our community dwells a man, in whose cranium has been out-lined an idea how individual mortals may readily sail aloft: which has grown into the pursuit of an attempt to invent a flying machine. If his efforts were crowned with success, we could look forth to the day when it would matter but little whether the long grass is pearling in dew, or the roads are rough and muddy. When we want to go and visit we make no footprints in mud or snow, and it will concern us little how the roads run. Instead of a walk or a bicycle-ride, the man and wife, young man with his girl will go out on a flight over woodlands, grain fields and meadows: the boys and girls will fly to school, and at recess they will go out chasing crows and sparrows. What an epoch making invention! Be it true that a man, with something of such momentous character occupying his mind, has his abode in our peaceful midst, we wish him all possible success, and hope the day is not far distant, when he shall succeed and all men shall extend to him a hand of congratulation

Today, as this paper goes out of press, we enjoy the last day of the valentine month. The last fourteen days, many a young man has remembered his sweetheart with well selected booklets, calendars or hearts with appropiate words in verse; many a person has been amused by some comical character sent to his address, and much illfeeling has been created upon receipts of hideous valentines with heart cutting words and phrases. We should, however, note those days as of no significance when we think that we have had the birthdays of the two greatest presidents our republic has ever had. George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. The one who believed that all man are created equal and we ought not to be subjects to a foreign power; the other that we are created equal and we have no right to wave thraldom over, and hold as slaves our fellowmen: The one who fought for and won our independence the other who with speech and with sword struggled for the freedom of the slaves, that right might be exercised with our fellow men, and the union might be preserved. Both were victorious, both models and examples to follow. Did we think of any of the sayings of Lincoln or the maxims of Washington, the twelfth or twenty-second of the month.

Career and Character of Abraham Lincoln.

An address by Joseph Choate, Ambassador to Great Britian, on the career and character of Abraham Lincoln—his early life—his early struggles with the world—his character as developed in the later years of his live and his life and his administration, which placed his name so high on the world's roll of honor and fame, has been published by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway and may be had by sending six (6) cents in postage to F. A. Miller, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Arms and the Woman

"As God hears me, herr," said Stahlberg stoutly, "I wrote not a line to you or to any one."

"Oh!" cried the innkeeper, stamping. "And you deny that you have written here that you saw her highness in the garden three nights ago?"

Gretchen was beginning to grow terrified for some reason. I myself was filled with wonder, knowing well enough that nothing about a garden had been written in the note I had received.

"Do you dare deny," went on the implacable old man, "that you have written here that you saw her highness in the garden and that she was weeping and murmuring this man's name?"

"Oh!" cried Gretchen, gazing wildly at the door.

The innkeeper suddenly took the bewildered giant by the shoulders and pushed him from the room, following him swiftly, and the door closed noisily behind them.

My heart was in flames. I understood all now, though I dare say Gretchen didn't. All at once her head fell on the back of the chair from which she had but lately risen. She was weeping silently and deeply. I did not move, but stood watching her, drinking in with exultation the loveliness of a woman in tears. She was mine, mine, mine! The innkeeper had not really known her heart till the night in the garden to which he so adroitly referred. Then he had made up his mind that things were not as they should be and had sent me that anonymous note. Mine at last, I thought. Somehow for the first time in my life I felt what is called masterful—that is to say, not all heaven and earth should take her away from me now. Softly I passed over to her side and knelt at her feet. I lifted the hem of her gown and pressed it to my lips.

"My princess," I murmured; "all mine." I kissed her unresisting hand. Then I rose and put my arms around her. She trembled, but made no effort to withdraw. "I swear to you, Gretchen, that I will never leave you again, not if the king should send an army against me, which he will never do, since he has commanded that I marry you. Beware! It is a dangerous thing to trifle with a king's will. And, then, even if the king should change his mind I should not. You are mine. I should like to know if I haven't won you! Oh, they do well to call you Princess Caprice! Oh, Gretchen," falling back to humble ways, "what a weary year has been wasted! You know that I love you. You have never really doubted it. You know that you have not. Had you gone to your sister when she wrote to you she would have told you that it was for you alone that I made her a princess, that all my efforts were to make you free to wed. Gretchen, you will not send me away this time, will you? You will be kind and bid me to stay?"

"I love you better than all the world."

"She loves you," whispered Gretchen.

This admitted no reply. I simply pressed my lips to her hair. The sobs were growing audibly less.

"I read it in her eyes," persisted Gretchen.

"Gretchen, answer me. Do you love me?"

"Yes."

I placed my hands against her temples and turned her head around so that those blue green eyes, humid and tearful, looked into mine.

"Oh, I cannot deny it. If I wrong her in accepting your love, it is because I cannot help it. I love you better than all the world. So well do I love you that"— Her head sank on my heart, and her sobs began afresh.

"That what, Gretchen?" I asked.

"Nothing." By and by she said: "Keep faith with me, and I promise to love as few women can."

Then I kissed her lips. "Gretchen?"

"What is it?"

"I have an idea that we shall be very happy. Now let us go and make terms of peace with the innkeeper."

We found him alone in the barroom.

"Gretchen," said I, "read this note."

As her eyes ran over those six words she blushed.

"Hermann," she said, "you have betrayed me."

"And when will your highness order me out to be shot?" asked he, smiling.

"At sunrise. But I shall blindfold the soldiers and take the charges from their guns. I forgive you."

"Now, Hermann," said I, "fill me up a stein." I held it high above my head. "A health! Long live the king! Long live her serene highness the Princess"—

"Elizabeth," said Gretchen gently. "I fear she has lost something which is never to be found again."

I drained the stein, and as I set it down I thought, Phyllis is so far away and Gretchen is so near!

"Let us go into the garden," said I.

For a long time we wandered here and there, saying nothing. I was thinking that I had found a castle at last which neither tides nor winds nor sudden awakenings could tumble down.

"Gretchen, you must never take up the sword again."

"Only in my lord's defense." From the movement of her arm, which clung to mine, I knew that she was laughing.

The moon had risen, the round and mellow moon of summer. The silver mists of night wavered and sailed through the aisles of the forests, and from the river came the cool, fresh perfume of the river rush.

"And so you really love me?" I asked.

"I do."

"Why do you love me?"

"Because," said Gretchen.

REAPPORTIONMENT.

The proposed reapportionment of the state decided upon by the sub committee of the legislature is sure to cause considerable trouble as many of the representatives object to it as drawn up. The Hennepin county delegation is practically against the plan as it leaves the whole county as one congressional district while there is almost enough population for two. The main difficulty seems to be that the delegation cannot agree on where the division is to be. The following is the population and Republican majority in the new districts.

First district—Population, 195,404: average Republican majority in 1898, 6,468.

Second district—Population, 189,954: average Republican majority in 1898, 10,402; 1900, 6,749.

Third district—Population, 183,166: average Republican majority in 1898, 3,589: 1900, 4,342.

Fourth district—Population, 211,010: average Republican majority in 1898, 3,531; 1900, 4,726.

Fifth district—Population 228,340: average Republican majority in 1898, 3,435: 1900, 8,210.

Sixth district—Population, 208,162: average Republican majority in 1898, 964: 1900, 2,214.

Seventh district — Population, 184,551: average Republican majority in 1898, 4,295; 1900, 7,611.

Eighth district—Population 156,943: average Republican majority in 1898, 1,874; 1900, 6,445.

Ninth district—population, 190,652: Republican majority in 1898, 788; 1900, 1558.

THE GOOD OLD FAVORITE.

The Merchants Hotel, corner Third and Jackson streets, St. Paul, the oldest and the most favorite hostlery in the Northwest, has in the past year been thoroughly renovated at an expense of $35,000. Every room is newly carpeted, papered, painted and steam-heated. The house is head quarters for Minnesota, North Dakota and Montana business men. Rates, $2.00 and $2.50 per day. Rooms with bath, $3.00. The management always welcome their old friends and patrons and they need no assurance that they will be well taken care of, and all new patrons may rest assurance of the same kind and courteous treatment. The Merchants Hotel is most convenient to Union Depot, the wholesale and commission merchants, and street cars pass the front doors by which guests can reach any part of either St. Paul or Minneapolis.

Advices from St. Paul are to the effect that the stampede for positions under the Railroad and warehouse commission still keeps up. Hundreds of applications are already on file and many are daily seeking employment. It is expected that a successor to Secretary A. K. Teisberg will be chosen this week, but it is not known who will get the place. Mr. Teisberg is a candidate for re-election and Former Chief Grain Inspector A. C. Clausen would like it. There are a dozen applications for the place, but it is the general opinion that the place will go to one of these two. The passage of the bill now before the legislature providing for a state board for the examination of candidates for positions as inspectors and weighers would save the commission much trouble, and it is the opinion of those close to the legislature that the bill will become a law.

When in need of flour, feed, bran and shorts buy ours, and you will get the best. Our feed mill does good grinding.

"The Only American Girl Who Ever Married a King," "The Loveliest of all Kentucky Girls," "The Anecdotal Side of Theodore Roosevelt," and "The Author's Reading at Bixby Centre," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, will have a wide reading in the March Ladies' Home Journal. And "The Gibson Play," too. It accentuates the satirical humor of Charles Dana Gibson's "Widow and Her Friends" in a two act comedy by Margurite Merington. The illustrations by Mr. Gibson are characteristic and interesting. Edward Bok's editorials and Hellen Watterson Moody's "Girls Who 'Go In' for Something" are helpful in counsel and will be profitably read. "The Story of a Young Man" is completed in the March Journal, and "The Successors of Mary the First" presents new and extremely funny complications and vexations. A good share of space is devoted to Easter fashions in feminine attire, and there are articles on cooking, china painting, "A Successful Country House at Bryn Mawr," "A Suburban house for $6500"; a page picture showing "The Old Stage and the Turnpike," of W. L. Taylor's "The Last Hundred Years in New England" series, and "Through Picturesque America"- two pages of photographs of views in Cuba and Porto Rico. A feature of the March Journal is Eugene Field's "Armenian Lullaby," set to music. By The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar a year: ten cents a copy.

The prospects for a settlement of the Schley-Sampson controversy by Congress at this session are not particularly bright, although the Senate Naval committee reported a bill especially prepared to do so. This bill, which revives the grade of vice-admiral and authorizes the President to appoint two officers thereto, was objected to by Senators Butler and Pettigrew, which sent it to the calendar. Senator Hale, Chairman of the Naval Committee, then said: "I give Senators notice that as soon as practicable I will call up the bill. If anything is to be done it should be done in a few days, in order that it may have consideration of the House of Representatives and President. If it be delayed long it will fall by the wayside and nothing will be done." The promotion of the other naval officers made by the President will be confirmed by the Senate, but it is very doubtful whether Congress will vote its thanks to Sampson for the victory off Santiago, as recommended by the President. If there is any vote of thanks, Schley's name is likely to be included if it does not appear alone

Chairman Victor E. Lawson, of the Peoples Party State Central Committee has called a meeting of the committee to convene at the Merchants Hotel at St. Paul on Friday evening, March 1, at 7:30 o'clock, for the purpose of discussion and taking some action in the matter of the work of party organization. He expresses the hope that every county in the state will be represented. It is believed that some action for a more compact and close organization is necessary before the next state campaign. With such an energetic and able newspaper man as Mr. Lawson at its head the Peoples Party state central committee will not go to sleep.

Victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles as well as women, and all feel the results in the loss of appetite, poisons in the blood, backache, nervousness, headache and tired, listless, run-down feeling. But there's no need to feel like that. Listen to J. W. Gardner, Idaville, Ind. He says: "Electric Bitters are just the thing for a man when he is all run down, and don't care whether he lives or dies. It did more to give me new strength and good appetite than anything I could take. I can now eat anything and have a new lease on life." Only 50 cents, at W. A. Schreiter Drug Store. Every bottle guaranteed.

The Thief River Falls Press says there is a growing sentiment for a division of Marshall county, the plan proposed contemplating making Thief River Falls the county seat, and including the northern tier of townships of Red Lake county. This is the plan unfolded some time ago but which has lain dorment pending the favorable crystalization of a proper sentiment in Marshall county. It appears now that the people in the western portion of Marshall county are awake to the advantages of the proposition and Warren is not averse to losing a portion of her domain which threatens to make trouble for the county seat. With this condition of affairs, and with Red Lake Falls ready to aid her sister city up the river in her landable ambition, there is every probability of something coming of the agitation.

A NATURAL-BORN COURTIER.

How a Youthful Son of Ex-Comptroller Trenholm Astonished the Diplomats.

Few men stood higher in the financial world of New York than William L. Trenholm, who was comptroller of the currency under President Cleveland. He is from the south and has always been a man of distinguished social qualities. He belongs to one of the best families of Charleston, S. C., and his home is the meeting place for the brilliant southerners who come north, says the Chicago Chronicle.

It is said of him that no one man in New York receives more letters from the entire south asking for positions than Mr. Trenholm, and that no southerner ever appealed to him in vain: that a dinner or a luncheon at the Trenholm house is in itself an opening for their new life.

A few of the eminent men of New York were talking of this the other day and chaffing Mr. Trenholm—who was present—about it. A Washington statesman said Trenholm impressed people in the same way when he was comptroller of the democratic administration. To illustrate the family aplomb he told the following story:

One New Year's day in Washington the youngest son of the house, a precocious boy, distinguished himself by gathering the visiting cards from his mother's table, ordering a hansom and making a round of visits at the most notable houses, sending in the first card that he picked from the bunch. When the butler at the English embassy announced the Chinese minister, Master Trenholm walked in with perfect aplomb and made a courtly South Carolina bow to his dumfounded hostess.

As the youngster was so serious and his manner so perfect no one thought to laugh. He was handed tea, and, bowing low to the ambassador from Great Britain, he backed out of the door and drove to the house of the secretary of state. There he happened to send in a card of the secretary of war, and so on until he had made the rounds, calling on the different women he knew.

MISS MUNRO MAKES RECORD.

Drives Four-in-Hand Five Days Without Feeling Slightest Fatigue.

With leaders gayly prancing, Miss Norma L. Munro's four spirited bays dashed into Norwood Park at Long Branch the other afternoon. This ended the last stage of a coaching trip which lasted five days, and was unique in the history of the sport.

Miss Munro not only enjoys the good fortune to be heiress to $10,000,000, but she is an accomplished sportswoman. Notwithstanding her devotion to art and literature, she finds much time for yachting and field sports. Above all she is an enthusiastic horsewoman. An accident last spring resulted in a fracture of her left wrist, but the break did not keep her long away from her favorite sports. Soon she was driving as much and as skillfully as ever.

Miss Munro began her last coaching trip last Tuesday. Her guests were her mother, Mrs. Norman L. Munro; Mrs. Robert Osborne, Albert Twyford, Charles E. Cushing and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Goodspeed. Fresh horses were put in at Hightown and Princeton was reached at six o'clock that evening. There Henry H. Munro, a student, and his friend, Mr. Waggerman, a son of a Baltimore millionaire, were added to the party. Next day the journey led as far as Bernardsville. That night the party was entertained by Mr. Blair, who is erecting a house that is to cost $1,000,000.

Miss Munro tooled the coach to Orange on Thursday through the most picturesque part of New Jersey. Thence homeward the trip was made by easy stages. Only three relays of horses were used, the last being put in at Redbank. Miss Munro was congratulated by all her friends. Not the slightest accident marred the pleasure of the trip. The weather was ideal and scenery delightful. The roads could not have been better.

Miss Munro accomplished the feat of driving four-in-hand for five days without feeling the slightest fatigue. She will have several entries in the forthcoming horse show.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER;

and loving cannot exist between you and me simply because of the accident of birth or the circumstance of wealth or difference in surroundings? Have we not already proved that it can exist?"

"Yes," replied Eric slowly. "It can exist, but it is in one sense an unnatural existence. You represent capital; I represent labor. Take the present situation of the strike. I believe as much as I believe anything that it is right and even religious that we do as we do. Deep in your heart you condemn us for the movement. If you were in your father's place, you would feel exactly as he does about it. How, then, can we expect the old relation between us to be continued?"

Stuart sat silent, looking out over the beautiful valley. The town looked very pretty in its setting of hills and plains. His father's house was the most conspicuous residence to be seen. From where the two men sat it looked palatial. Down at the other end of the town among the miners' houses Stuart could distinguish Eric's home, a little two story cottage, not different from a hundred others. He did a good deal of hard thinking in a few minutes; then he said:

"Eric, you began the talk about the difference between us. Do you want to break off anything? Is that your intention?"

Eric for the first time grew flushed beneath his dark bronzed face. "No," he said. "I simply wished to state the conditions under which we now live. There is no change in my feelings toward you and cannot be."

"Neither is there in mine toward you, Eric. Why do you place the responsibility so wholly on me, as if I would be the one to change or as if it rested with me to say that our friendship was possible or not?"

"Because it does rest with you. Are you not representative of riches, power, intelligence, all the great machinery which sets things in motion, society, that world by itself, leisure, culture, advantages? And is it not for you as representative of all these things to bear the responsibility which must always rest on the strong and the educated and the wealthy?" Eric paused on the crest of a wave of speech that seemed about to break over all his self control.

Stuart after awhile said doggedly: "It comes back to the question, is our friendship to continue on the old basis? I can be no other than I am. If I have been born to wealth and leisure and education and society and travel and all that, I am powerless to change it. And you are what you are because you have been born into it and choose to continue there, though you know, Eric, you could rise out of it if you only would."

"It is useless to discuss that point," replied Eric quietly. "But tell me, Stuart, in answer to the main question, do you believe in this strike?"

"No; I can't say I do," said Stuart, with his usual frankness.

"There! You see where the difficulty lies," replied Eric sadly. "The very nature of the situation compels a breach in our old relations with each other. Of course I believe in the strike or I wouldn't be the leader of it."

"It seems like a bad way to get at what you want," said Stuart.

"Have you studied into the details of the situation? Do you know all the facts which have led up to this movement?"

"I know what my father has told me. He says the men did not consult with the companies and went out without warning or notice of any kind."

Eric rose to his feet. "It's a lie!" he exclaimed, with a sudden passion that no one would suspect existed. It was like an explosion that transformed the man into another being.

Stuart also rose. "Do you mean to say that my father lied to me about the facts?"

"I do!" retorted Eric. "He lied, and he knows he lied!"

Stuart took one step toward Eric, and the two young men confronted each other. Suddenly Eric turned on his heel and without a word walked down the hill. For a moment Stuart seemed on the point of going after him or calling out for him to stop, but the next moment he stepped back to the stone and sat down. When Eric had disappeared behind a clump of trees, Stuart rose and went toward home by another path.

When he reached the house, Louise met him and told him his father wanted to see him at once. He went in and stood by the bed, his whole being stirred by the interview with Eric. It was the first real passion to speak of that had roused his self controlled nature. His father spoke with the bluntness that always marked his speech:

"Stuart, I want you to go to Cleveland for the company. This strike has caused complications with our local agents. There is important business that I ought to see to in person. Can you go at once? The eastern express is due at 6 o'clock."

"I am at your service, father," replied Stuart. He was still going over his recent interview with Eric.

"Here are the papers. I can explain the business to you in a few minutes."

Stuart drew up a chair, and his father gave him instructions. Then as Stuart put the papers in his pocket Ross Duncan said, his face and manner softening a little as he fell back on his pillows:

"Stuart, lad, in case anything happens to me, of course you know I have left everything to you and Louise. The mines, with other property and invested funds, besides New York property and bonds not connected with the mines, are worth over $4,000,000. I have left Louise $1,000,000 in property. You will be left in the sole charge of everything in case I die. Of course you understand that I am the company. This strike is against me. If I die, it will be against you. I believe I can depend on you to defend the millions I have worked so hard all my life to get together," said Ross Duncan. Then in his old manner he said, "You will have to hurry to get that train."

Stuart rose, and a conflict of feelings rose with him. What his father had just said moved him one way; the afternoon with Eric moved him another. He wanted to ask his father one question before he went away.

"Father," he asked almost timidly, "did you tell me that the strikers went out without giving the companies any notice or warning?"

"Yes."

"Do you mean that they gave absolutely no hint of their intentions to any one?"

Ross Duncan rose up a little, and his face changed.

"They sent their representative, as they called him, to me about two weeks before the morning of the strike to confer about wages, but I wouldn't recognize any such representative with any right to interfere with my business and tell me what wages I ought to pay."

"Who was the representative?" Stuart asked the question, well knowing the answer.

"Who was it? Who but that praying, pious friend of yours, Eric Vassall!" Ross Duncan sat up, and the wound on his forehead grew purple. Stuart was frightened at the sight. He could not say anything. His father sank down again, exhausted with his anger. Stuart went away without even a word of farewell. There was a bitterness in his heart that was new to it. Eric had been right, then, according to his view. The company had received notice. There had been an attempt at consultation. As the train whirled him on he cursed in his heart the whole social perplexity.

He reached the city, attended to the business and started back the next day to Champion. It was just dusk when he stepped out on the station platform. He thought a crowd of curious looking people was there. Something had happened. Dr. Saxon came up, seized his bag and grasped his hand in a strong but nervous manner. Solemn, strangely set faces looked out of the dusk at him.

"What's the matter, doctor?"

"What's the matter, doctor?" asked Stuart, trembling at something he could not think what.

"Your father, my boy"—

"Is he worse?"

"Come this way. My buggy is right here. I will drive you out to the house. Get right in."

Stuart got into the buggy mechanically. The doctor threw himself in, and the horse made a plunge into the dark.

"Tell me the truth, doctor." Stuart's voice was steady, but faint.

The answer came after a moment. "Your father died, Stuart, an hour ago. He had a stroke of apoplexy. There was some heart trouble. He did not suffer."

For a moment everything in the universe reeled about Stuart Duncan. Then he found he was asking questions and Dr. Saxon was answering them. When they reached the house, Stuart met Louise first. She came to the front door and threw herself into his arms, crying hysterically. Stuart had not shed a tear yet. They led him into the room where Ross Duncan lay. The son stood and looked down at the cold face with that newly made scar on the forehead. There was no thought in his mind that he was now the owner of several millions of wealth. He was thinking of the last interview he had with that father and his parting without a word of affectionate farewell. And still the tears would not come to his relief.

At last he went out, and the sight of his sister's grief and fear brought the tears to his own eyes. He wept with her. They talked together. The doctor remained an hour and then took his leave. The night wore on. Louise, exhausted with the shock, had gone to her room. Stuart was finally left alone. He sent the servants all away. He could not sleep. He paced the long hallway until daylight. Just as the sun rose he went in where his father lay and looked at him again. Ross Duncan's millions were of no use to him now. Of what use were they to the [illegible]? What kind of responsibility had come to him now? These mines, these labor troubles, this strike, these wages—what difference if he let them all go? He had a right to do as he chose with his own. He would dispose of it all and live abroad. He would—what? He was planning all this and his father dead less than 24 hours! And, then, what responsibility did rest upon him? What difference did it make to him what wages the men received? Was he his brother's keeper? Were they his brothers? The whole thing was complex, irritating. His father's death had thrown a burden on him that he did not want to carry.

He was disturbed by a noise in the street before the house. He went to the window and drew aside the curtain. The measured tramp of heavy feet was heard coming down the road. A column of men, four abreast, came into sight, with one man a little in advance of the others carrying a banner. It contained a very rude drawing of a rich man and a poor man. The rich man was saying, "What do you want?" The poor man was saying, "Crumbs from the rich man's table." It was all very crude and one sided in every way. The column of men swung by, nearly 500 miners on their way from the upper range to join the strikers in Champion in their regular morning gathering at the park. Every man as he went by turned his head and looked up at the house where the dead mine owner lay. It is possible that they saw the son standing there. He watched the column tramp through the dust and disappear down the road. And as he turned back toward all that remained of the mortal flesh of the man who had been worth so many millions he was conscious that he was face to face with the great problem of his own existence, with which was involved the problem of thousands of other men. How will he answer that problem?

CHAPTER II.

LARGE RESPONSIBILITIES.

A week after the death and burial of Ross Duncan, Stuart and Louise were talking together of their future plans. Louise lay on a lounge, looking very pretty, dressed in mourning of a fashionable pattern. She appeared vexed at something Stuart had just said and tapped her foot smartly against the end of the lounge.

"I have no patience with you, Stuart. Why don't you talk sense?"

"I thought I was talking sense," replied Stuart, who was standing up by one of the windows of the room looking out on the front lawn. He turned and walked back to the end of the room and continued to pace up and down. He was very thoughtful and part of the time seemed not to hear all that Louise said.

"Well, you lose all your sense the minute the subject of these horrid miners comes up," continued Louise. "If I was the governor of this state, I would order out the militia at once."

"Why?" asked Stuart, with a slight smile. "The men are not doing anything. What would you order out the troops for?"

"I would get new men in to take the men's places and then order the militia. And, you know, Stuart, it will have to come to that at last."

Stuart answered nothing. He was thinking hard of that very thing.

Louise went on talking while he stood still by the window for a minute looking out at the hills. "I regard father's death as caused directly by the miners. They frightened the horses and caused the accident that killed him. I don't see how you can side with the men in this strike."

"I don't," said Stuart without turning around.

"Then why don't you do something to start up the mines? Haven't we a right to manage our own business and hire other men? If the miners threaten to interfere, we have a right to call for state troops."

"I hope it will not come to that," replied Stuart gravely as he walked up to the lounge and sat down by his sister. "Louise, I want to talk plainly with you about this matter. I do not feel just as father did about it."

"You just said you didn't side with the men."

Louise sat up and arranged her dress. Some ribbons at her throat kept her fingers busy for a minute.

"I don't side with them in the sense that I believe they are doing the right thing to strike this way. But I believe they ought to have more wages and that the companies ought to pay them the scale they have drawn up." Stuart was talking aloud to his sister, for the first time really expressing his convictions as they had grown on him every day since his father's death had thrown the burden of ownership upon him.

Louise heard his statement with a frown. For awhile she was silent; then she rose and walked out of the room, angrily saying as she went: "Ross Duncan's son is not much like his father. That's true if you did say it."

Stuart rose and went over by the window again. He was vexed not with Louise, but with the whole situation. Since his father's death he had gone through a great many struggles, and each one had left him with the feeling of his responsibility heavier upon him. The strike was in the same condition as when it began. The different mine owners at Cleveland had conferred together and were united in their determination not to yield to the demand for higher wages. Stuart had been asked to come down to a conference to be held in the city that week. He expected to leave the next day. As he stood looking out at the stock covered hills he knew that a crisis was rapidly approaching and that within the next few days events would be precipitated that would leave their mark upon his whole life. He was not a coward, and that was the reason he could not run away from the situation. The interests of the mines at Champion were all in his hands, but the other mines on the upper and lower ranges were involved with his in the general strike. He was not at full liberty to act alone. Besides, the men had within a week formed a union and would not treat with the separate mine owners, insisting that the companies must recognize the union as a whole.

Meanwhile matters were coming to a crisis very fast. Stuart clinched his hands tightly and bit his lips nervously as he turned again from the window and paced the room. He was worth more than $2,000,000 in his own right, and yet the possession of the money caused him little real pleasure. With all the rest he was having an inward revolution of education toward the entire problem. And he could not avoid the feeling that before the week was gone he might come face to face with the greatest fact of his life.

As he stood there thinking it all over the bell rang, and one of the servants came and said that Eric was at the door. Stuart went himself out into the hall.

"Come in, Eric," he said quietly.

Eric came in, and the two men shook hands silently. Since Ross Duncan's death these two had met several times, and it seemed as if the old family relation between them might be possible again. There was, however, still a serious barrier, caused by the conditions that surrounded the two men.

"I came up this morning," began Eric, with his usual directness, "to tell you that the men want you to speak to them at the park today at noon."

Stuart was surprised. "I thought the men would not admit any one to the speaking stand except those of their own number."

"They haven't so far. You are the only one, or you will be if you come to the meeting today."

"What do the men want?" Stuart asked the question not feeling just sure that he cared to go.

Eric did not reply immediately. He seemed to be waiting for Stuart to say something more.

Stuart sat looking at Eric with that quiet gaze peculiar to him. "Do the men want me to make a speech on the situation?"

"I do not know just what they expect. They simply voted to ask you to come this noon. It may be an opportunity for a settlement."

Eric spoke slowly. Stuart suddenly rose and went over and put a hand on his old acquaintance's shoulder.

"Eric," he said, while a sad smile crossed his face and died out in its usual thoughtful quiet, "doesn't it seem strange to you that we should be making so much out of such an affair as a difference of a few cents more for a day's work? Is life worth having if it must be spent in serious quarrels over such little matters?"

"Do you call this a little matter?" Eric spoke almost bitterly. And then he added bluntly, "A few cents a day may be a little to a man who has plenty of money, but it may mean the difference between comfort and suffering to the man who has almost nothing."

Stuart colored, but answered quietly: "No, Eric, you do not just understand me. I am ready to pay this difference in the men's wages. I think their demand is just."

"Come to the park this noon and tell them so."

"Well, I will. I am going to Cleveland tomorrow, Eric."

"If all the owners were like you, the strike would not hold out long," said Eric as he rose to go. He had a great deal to do to prepare for the noon meeting, and in spite of Stuart's urging him to remain longer he went away. There was still a gap between the two. They did not feel easy in each other's presence. Eric had not spoken of the first meeting they had, and Stuart, while feeling differently about it, had not approached the subject.

He told Louise of his invitation to speak to the men at the park and went out after a little while, intending to go up on one of the hills and think for himself. But as he drove out into the road he changed his mind and went down into the town and up into Dr. Saxon's office. He thought he would ask his advice in the matter.

The doctor was alone, which was a rare circumstance with him. He greeted Stuart with the familiarity which came from a lifelong acquaintance.

"Well, you aristocrat, are you going to trample on the feelings of the poor downtrodden masses much longer? Are you going to withhold from them their rightful dues?"

"Doctor, I am going to speak to the men at the park this noon."

"Are you? Well, give 'em a dose that'll put 'em on the sick list for a month. They're the most ungrateful, obstinate, pigheaded, senseless crowd of human animals I ever saw. I've made up my mind, Stuart, not to do another thing for 'em. I'm not in the pay of the companies any more, am I, since this strike set in?"

"No, I suppose not—that is, the contract the mines made with you is good only while the mines are in operation."

"Just so. Well, here these wild Cornishmen expect me to doctor 'em just the same whether I am getting anything for it or not. I have made up my mind that I won't do it any longer."

Just then there were a sound of steps outside and a shuffled noise, followed by a thump on the door that might have been made by the thick end of a club.

"Come in!" shouted the doctor. "Here's one of 'em now," he said to Stuart in a low tone. "Watch me deal with him."

The door opened, and in shambled a man of enormous build. He had a great mass of tangled yellow hair on his head, and his beard was of the same color. He was fully 6 feet 4 inches in height and had astonishingly long arms and large feet. Stuart sat back in the window seat looking on, and, although he was running over in his mind what he would say to the men, he could not help smiling at the scene that followed.

"I am ready to pay this difference in the men's wages," said Stuart.

"I come to fill the bottle, doctor," was the quiet remark of the big miner.

The doctor made no motion to take the bottle which the man pulled out of his vest pocket and stood holding awkwardly between his two hands.

"You can move out of here with your bottle, Sanders. I'm not filling any bottles any more."

"Since when?" asked Sanders slowly.

"Since this strike, this nonsensical, foolish business of yours and the rest of you. Do you think I'm going to go to all the expense of keeping up my drugs and medicines and sew you fellows up and fill you up with costly preparations while I'm not getting anything from the companies? So get out with your bottle!"

Sanders without a word backed toward the door. The doctor wheeled around toward his desk and began to hum a tune. Just as the miner laid his hand on the doorknob the doctor turned his head and shouted, "What was in the bottle, anyway?"

"Cod liver oil," replied Sanders, scratching his head and slowly turning the doorknob.

"When did you get it filled?"

"Last week, sir."

"Last week! It was three days ago, or I'm a striker! What on earth did you do with half a pint of cod liver oil in that time?"

Sanders shook his head and smiled faintly, but did not venture to say anything.

"Have you been greasing your boots with it? I'll be willing to swear that you have, only half a pint wouldn't oil more than one of 'em. Well, bring it here. I'll fill it this once and that's all. What did I give it to you for? Do you remember?"

Sanders kept discreet silence, and the doctor said to Stuart: "It isn't cod liver oil exactly; it's a new preparation that I have just had sent up from Chicago, and it has been of some use in lung troubles. I think perhaps I'll let him have another bottle. He has a bad cough." As if to second the doctor's statement, Sanders gave utterance to a hoarse rumble that was on the same large scale as himself and shook the bottles on the doctor's dispensary shelves. The doctor measured out a quantity of the medicine, picked out a new cork and as he handed the bottle over said cheerfully: "Now, Sanders, of course you will forget everything I tell you, but I want you to remember that if you don't follow the directions on the bottle you are liable to fall down dead any minute. Well, is there anything more?"

The miner was shuffling his hand down in his pocket among a lot of loose change.

"How much is it?" he finally asked.

"Oh, well, that's all right," said the doctor, turning red. "Keep it to remember me by. I'll make you a birthday present of it. But, mind you, no more medicine from this office till the strike is over. I can't afford to doctor a thousand men for nothing."

Sanders went out, and the doctor turned to Stuart and said: "I thought I might as well let him have it. Pshaw! I'm too easy. But Sanders has got consumption. Awful queer how these big fellows catch it."

Just then there was a tap on the door, and before the doctor could call out the door opened, and a little old woman came in. She had a very sad face and looked like one of those persons who know life mainly through its troubles.

"Docter," she said after bowing to Stuart, "me old man is sufferin terrible this mornin. I want ye to send him somethin to ease the pain a bit."

"Where is his pain?"

"Eh?"

"I say where is his pain—in his head or feet?"

"In his back, doctor, an he is howlin like murder for somethin to ease him. I come right down here. The doctor, he said, would give me anything I needed."

"Yes, that's it. The beggars don't care if I go into bankruptcy and ruin through giving them anything they need."

The doctor rose and went over to his dispensary shelves. After a very careful search he selected a bottle and poured from it into a small one, wrote directions, pasted them on and gave the medicine to the woman.

"Here, now, Mrs. Binney, I know just what your husband's trouble is. He strained the muscles of his back that time he got caught between the timbers in the De Mott mine."

"Yes"—the woman's face lighted up with some pride—"Jim held up the timbers until the other men crawled out."

"That's so. Well, I don't mind helping him. Use this as I have directed, and it will give him some relief."

The woman thanked the doctor, and as she turned to go she wiped her eyes with her sleeve. The doctor followed her out into the hall, and Stuart could not help hearing him say to her, "I'll be out to see Jim this afternoon, tell him, Mrs. Binney."

He came back and sitting down at his desk thumped it hard with his fist.

"That's the last case I'll take till the strike ends. The only way to bring these people to terms is to treat them sternly. I tell you, Stuart, I can't afford to go on giving medicine and service this way. It will ruin me, and, besides, it isn't professional."

There was a timid knock at the door, and the doctor caught up a medical magazine, opened it bottom side up and turned his back to the door. There was another rap, and then, as the doctor made no sound, the door opened, and a boy about 12 years old came in timidly and stood with his cap in his hand, looking first at Stuart and then at the doctor's back.

"Father's been hurt. He is pump man at Davis' mine. He wants you to come right up."

"Up where?" asked the doctor without turning around.

"Up where we live."

"Where's that?"

"The same place."

"What's his name?"

"Why, you know his name, doctor. You have seen him before."

The doctor wheeled around and roared: "Well, do I know the names of a thousand different men like that? Who is your father?"

"Pump man in the Davis mine."

"Well, there are six different pump men up there. Which one is he?"

The boy began to get scared and backed toward the door.

"What's the matter with your father?" asked the doctor more gently, rising and reaching out for his black case and putting on his hat.

The boy began to sob. "I don't know. He's hurt."

"Well, you run down and get into my buggy and sit there till I come. Hurry, now." The boy backed out of the door and tumbled down the stairs. The doctor gathered up his things and, shouting to Stuart, "This case seems to call for my help," he dashed out of the room.

"Father's been hurt," said the boy.

There was a drug store directly under the doctor's office, where a case of candy was kept. Stuart, leaning out of the window, saw the doctor come out of the store with a bag of something which he gave to the boy. Then getting into the buggy he started off at his usual express rate and disappeared in a great whirlwind of red iron ore dust.

Stuart smiled and said to himself: "Dear old Doc! I was going to say that his bark was worse than his bite, only it's all bark." His face grew stern again as he saw from the window a sight that was growing familiar to the people of Champion.

It was now about 11 o'clock, and into the open space around the band stand in the center of the town square the miners were beginning to come in groups of twos and fours and by little companies. They came in from their homes out on the hills, each miner carrying a stick, the uses of which became more apparent as the men formed afterward in marching order.

The different miners' bands had already gathered near the stand. They united in the playing of several stirring pieces while the crowd was gathering. Very fast the square filled up. At last, as the clock on the tower pointed its hands at a quarter after 11, 1,000 men were packed into the open space surrounded by the town buildings. Stuart remained looking out from the doctor's office window. The whole scene was before him. He could hear as well. Since that first day when he had come home from his European trip he had seen the miners together in this way several times, but today he was impressed more than ever with the appearance of the men, with their rude, misspelled banners, with their music made entirely by men out of the mines who had trained themselves with great patience to play march tunes. More than all, he was struck with the faces of the men—the stolid, dull, but determined look that most of them wore. He was impressed with their general appearance as human beings making a fight for a few more cents a day. And with all the rest he could not help feeling that the men regarded him as an aristocrat removed from them by his whole life, so different from theirs, and unable from their point of view to sympathize with or understand them.

"And yet," Stuart said to himself, with a sigh, "I would almost exchange places with nearly any one of them. I mean that I am not where I can use

A powerful engine cannot be run with a weak boiler, and we can't keep up the strain of an active life with a weak stomach; neither can we stop the human machine to make repairs. If the stomach cannot digest enough food to keep the body strong, such a preparation as Kodol Dyspepsia Cure should be used. It digests what you eat and it simply can't help but do you good. W. C. P. Swanson while out for a drive last Tuesday had as consort, a large grey wolf. The wolf followed faithfully for half a mile, keeping time to the musical chime of the bells, by an ocassional growl, and a display of his molars. When in sight of more civilized environments the varmint took "french leave." It is superfluous to add that the "Winchester" was at home, doing guard on the wall, and the carnal sensations of the driver can be better conjectured than by pen depicted.

SEED WHEAT

We have selected some very choic seed wheat, that we will sell or exchange. We have both pure Scotch Fife and Blue Stem, and it is free from all foul seed, cleaned ready for a seeder. This wheat was raised in the bottom lands near the Red River of the North, and is about as fine a sample of wheat as we have ever seen. We have tested samples of the wheat that has been damaged by rain and find that about only forty of fifty per cent of it will grow, and when it does grow it makes a very puny and inferior straw. As a matter of fact there are very few farmers who appreciate the value of a change of seed. They will go on year after year seeding the old, run out, cockly seed, when a good strong seed gives them from 2 to 3 bushels per acre more and it does not cost any more to plow, harrow, seed or harvest, and they would have a good seed wheat of their own the following year. Sample of this seed wheat can be seen at our office or at the Crompe Elevator.

FRAME ROW BURNED

FIRE MONDAY MORNING WIPES OUT A ROW OF FOUR BUILDINGS.

FIRE ORIGINATED IN BERBRICH & SON'S CITY MEAT MARKET.

The fire fiend still has his clutches upon Red Lake Falls, despite all the vigilance that has been brought to bear in the hopes of stamping him out. For the past year and a half the fire department has gotten the upper hand of every encounter, and some stops were made, in the center of frame rows that gave us a feeling of security. Sunday morning, however, a frame row of four business houses was wiped out of existence in spite of the best that the Department could do.

About 1 o'clock Fred Borchers, who occupied the residence that over his saloon, was awakened by a crackling in the rear of the building, and looking out of the window, discovered the building occupied by Berbrich & Son's butcher shop to be on fire. He immediately gave the alarm and rang the fire bell. The department responded and although it was a terrible night, with a fierce blizzard sweeping from the northwest, it looked for a time as if the flames would be confined to the butcher shop. In fact so sure was everyone of this that the occupants of the adjoining buildings who were removing goods, began carrying them back, feeling that the danger was over. Suddenly the flames burst out anew, in the rear, and the firemen were prevented from getting at the fire there by the dense suffocating smoke, hurled in all directions by the furious gale and the draft created by the heat. For over four hours the firemen had two and three streams playing on the flames, and the fight was kept up until the water in the 1500-barrel cistern was exhausted. The fire made a clean sweep, barring the Hetu building, and a few timbers that were pulled out by the hook and ladder company, and the floors of the buildings which were slowly burning all day and until the department, after re-filling the cistern, in the evening finished their work.

The fire originated in the back room of the City Meat Market. It is said from the explosion of an air tight stove. This building belonged to Theo. Majeres and was rented by Berbrich & Son. There were two buildings on either side of this—one, owned by P. E. Pirath, directly adjoining this on the north, occupied by that gentleman as an office and residence; the other, owned by L. Hetu and occupied by him as a shoe store and residence, and by L. Berthiaume as a butcher shop. Next to the south was F. Borchers' two story building, occupied on the first floor as a saloon, and on the second floor as a residence: the structure on the corner owned by H. B. Kaufer, was occupied by S. A. Swanson's real estate office. The losses foot up quite heavy, and it appears that the insurance carried was quite light. Mr. Borchers lost part of his household goods and the greater part of his stock of liquors and fixtures. Nothing was saved from the butcher shop, and P. E. Pirath loses most of his household goods. S. A. Swanson had just put in a new safe and this was lost, together with some furniture and fixtures.

MORE DIFFICULT.

IF THIS MEASURE BECOMES A LAW GOOD BYE TO DIVORCES BY DEFAULT.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, March 6.—A bill has been introduced in the senate, which if passed, will cause a stringency in the divorce market. The bill provides for personal service. The measure absolutely prohibits divorces by default. No divorce can be granted except after a hearing in open court.

LINCOLN COUNTY.

THIEF RIVER FALLS WANTS TO BE THE CAPITAL OF A NEW COUNTY.

The question which is now agitating the county division schemers is just now what territory to include in the proposed new county of Lincoln. The question must be looked upon from three standpoints. First, what townships would wish to become a part of the new county; second, how much would the Warren people be willing to give up of Marshall County; third, how much of Red Lake County would Red Lake Falls willingly part with. On the south side of the county line the towns of North, Numedal, Bray, Sanders, Rocksbury would be practically unanimous for the new county but the question arises, will Red Lake Falls part with the Southern tier of towns mentioned without a big howl? This is the question which must be soon decided. On the other side of county line the problem is less difficult. Everything east of Thief River would vote for division and the towns of Excel, New Solum, Holt, East Valley, Cedar, Thief Lake and Como would probably do likewise. Warren Stephen and Argyle would probably put up no very strenuous objections to such a line of division for they would realize that division is inevitable and the sooner it is over the sooner the county will settle down to internal improvement within permanent lines. It is highly improbable that the towns of Viking, New Folden or Spruce Valley would wish to be detached from Marshall county or that the rest of the county would care to give them up. The question then arises, what shall be done with Bray, Sanders and Rocksbury. Speak up Red Lake Falls, and let us hear from you. And how about St. Hilaire? How do you feel on the subject? Let's all talk it over and come to an understanding.—Thief River Falls Press.

Married at High Noon.

Salem acted as best man and Olina Haugen as bridesmaid. RAILWAY POLICE.

A BILL PRESENTED TO MAKE RAILWAY EMPLOYEES POLICEMEN.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, March 6.—Senator Daugherty has introduced a bill authorizing the governor to make railway employes police officers, giving them the same power as constables or policemen, except that they may not serve civil papers. They are to wear stars bearing the words "Railway police" and the name of the railway corporation employing them. The bill is intended to give railway employes the power to make arrests for violations of the law occurring on railway property. Any one named refusing to act as a railway policeman is to be subject to a fine of $250 or imprisonment for not less than six months or both in the discretion of the court. What the effect of such a law would be in case of a railway strike is a question that will interest the employes. If conductors or brakemen who are members of the unions can be forced to act as railway policemen during strikes they will oppose the bill.

UP AGAINST IT

JOE P. STEELE, FORMER N. P. AGENT HERE, SPORTED TWO WIVES.

NO. 2 IS NOW BRINGING AN ACTION FOR $15,000 DAMAGES.

Papers have been filed in the district court of Norman county by Moen & Matson, as attorneys for Christine Hendricks, who resides a few miles from Gary, in which Joe Steele, also known as Dave Bethel, is made correspondent to a suit for $15,000 damages. It seemed that on the eight day of January 1899. Steele, at that time an agent for the Northern Pacific at Gary, was united in marriage to Miss Hendricks, the ceremony being performed at Ada. He then represented himself to be a single man and passed as such among the citizens of Gary, and it was not until nearly a year after the marriage took place that the then Mrs Steele discovered that he had another wife who went by the name of Bethel and a separation followed. Since then Mrs. Steele, along with her son, which was born shortly before the separation, have resided with her parents in the eastern part of the county and being in very moderate circumstances has been unable to spend either time or money in an effort to locate Steele who had left Gary for parts unknown. A few days prior to the bringing of this action, it was learned that he had returned to the state and was acting as agent for the Great Northern at Bemidji, where the papers were served on him. Steele is said to have property in the south and Miss Hendricks may be able to obtain some redress for the great wrong done her.

Another Branch Office.

The Ed. L. Healy Land & Loan Company, of this city, will establish its second branch at Fosston, with I. Jensen as manager. Messrs. Healy and Jensen visited Fosston last week and rented an office in the Nordus block there. This is the second branch established by the firm, the other being at Thief River Falls. We can assure the people of Fosston that in the Ed L. Healy Co. they have secured a prize. This firm has been located at Red Lake Falls but a comparatively short time, but they have demonstrated themselves to be veritable whirlwinds in the land business and will benefit any city fortunate enough to secure them.

ON THE ACTIVE LIST.

THE FOURTH REGIMENT OF NATIONAL GUARD DESIRES THUS TO BE PLACED.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, March 6.—A strong effort is being made to have the legislature place the Fourth regiment of the National Guard on the active list. This regiment was organized at the time all the other regiments of the guard were in the service of the government during the Spanish war. When these regiments returned two years ago the legislature refused to recognize the Fourth and that regiment was placed on the reserve list and was not given any state aid. It is the opinion of the guard officers of the state that there should be a fourth regiment of infantry, as the quota of troops in the state is much below that of other states where the population is the same. Many companies of the Fourth regiment have retained their organization and the regiment would be easily filled. The National Guard asks for an additional appropriation of $15,000 to put the regiment on the active list.

HARD FIGHT ENDED.

THE HOUSE KILLS THE FIVE-SIXTHS JURY SCHEME. VOTE 55 TO 50.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service

St. Paul, March 6.—Mr. Sweet's five-sixths jury bill has been defeated. The vote was very close—55 to 50. But it was enough. The measure has been fought inch by inch since it was introduced. Corporate interests were used as the principal argument by both sides of the controversy. The opponents of the measure asserted that the claim that corporations spend money to influence juries had become too common to be ignored, and that to allow five-sixths of a jury to determine upon a verdict would increase the opportunities for corruption. Those in favor of the bill claimed that corporations did not seek to buy juries, but to corrupt one or two members, thereby securing a disagreement when a verdict in their interest was impossible.

NO. 2.

P. K. OLSON'S RESTAURANT GOES UP IN SMOKE TUESDAY.

The startling tones of the fire bell fell upon the frosty air Tuesday afternoon about three o'clock, just as our citizens were getting settled down after the big fire scare of the day before. It was thought at first to be merely a call for a meeting of the department, as it seemed scarcely credible that the conflagration of Monday would be followed by another the day after. But such proved to be the case. Fire broke out in the kitchen and spread so rapidly that only the furniture in the front room could be saved—that on the second floor and in the back rooms being ruined by fire and smoke. It was some time after the alarm was turned in that the department succeeded in getting water on, the hose threatening to freeze up, but two streams were finally put to work, and the building was saved, although it is practically a shell and a wreck. The structure which stands on the corner of Champagne & 2d, is the property of Frank E. Hunt and was insured for $400. Olson carried $250 insurance. The wind drove the smoke directly toward Findelsen's establishment twenty-five feet to the south, but all doors and windows were kept closed by order of Chief Belair until water was turned on and this wise precaution averted a general conflagration, as there was a long delay in getting the stream started. The department saved block seven from destruction, which would have been swift and sure but for their efficient services.

Reported That Lumbermen Are Cutting Green Pine Timber.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER;

what I was born into as I would like to use it."

The bands stopped playing, and a miner went up into the stand. This time it was not Eric. The men all uncovered their heads. It was very quiet. The people of Champion stood looking on from the sidewalks, the church steps, the railroad depot platform and the store and office windows. The man in the stand lifted up his face and offered a short prayer.

"O God, grant us a blessing today as we go to our place of meeting. Be with us there in our council together. Grant that we may be led to do the right. Keep us all from trespass or sin or drunkenness. And when we have ended our strife here below, may we all, master and men, meet in heaven. We ask it for Jesus' sake. Amen."

Stuart heard every word of the prayer from where he sat. There was something indescribably sad to him in the whole scene. The miners put on their hats, and the bands at once struck up a lively tune. The men began to move out into the main street, forming a double line or column four abreast. The bands marched each one in front of a section or division of the line of march. The men at a signal shouldered their sticks, and, accustomed by this time to the marching, they presented a military appearance as they swung past the church and into the road leading over to the park, where they now held a daily meeting at noon.

Stuart watched for Eric and as he came by called to him from the window:

"I'll drive over. My horse and buggy are here."

Eric waved his hand and went by without replying. Stuart came down, and after the columns of men had passed he drove along at a little distance behind them.

All the way over he was debating with himself what he would say. It was the first time he had really met the men. A great many of them did not know what the feeling of the new mine owner was. They supposed that Ross Duncan's son was like the father. Others among them had known him as a child and boy and liked him. He was a favorite in the town. Many a rough, reckless, stolid Dane and Cornishman had admired the lad who had been so fearless in going up and down the shafts. There was a good deal of favorable comment among the men in line over his coming out today.

So when he finally came into the park and was met by a committee there and escorted up into the pavilion where the speakers went he faced a great crowd that was in the humor to give him fair play at least. A thousand more men had come in from the other ranges, and an audience of over 5,000 was packed deep all about the pavilion.

Stuart could not remember afterward all that was said that day by himself or the men. Eric had spoken briefly, and then in behalf of the union so recently formed he said that he had the pleasure of introducing the owner of the Champion mines, who would address the meeting.

Stuart had never spoken in public except on a few occasions in college rhetoricals. He was no orator, and he knew it. And yet as he rose to speak to this outdoor gathering in a position that might have tried many experienced speakers he felt a sense of relief and a certain pleasure.

He began at once with a statement of his willingness to grant the men their scale of wages.

"If I understand the situation," he said, "the demand made by the contract miners is for $2 a day on account of the danger of the work and because the companies have been paying only $1.90 for more than a year now. I believe the companies ought to pay that price. I might as well say that I do not believe you have taken the right course to get what you want. I cannot sympathize with this strike. I do sympathize with your demand for $2 a day."

"How about the rest of the companies?" asked a voice.

"Aye, that's it. How about the lower range? What's the mind on that point?" said another.

"I cannot answer for them. I am here today to speak for myself. If the men who are employed in the Champion mines will come back at any time now, I will give them what they ask for."

This statement was greeted with cheers, but at once there followed a storm of cries from all over the park.

"All or none!"

"Union rules first!"

"The owners must treat with the union!"

"We'll never go back on terms that shut out part!"

"Stand together, men! That's what the owners does!"

"Yes, they fixes wages. We fix they if"—

Eric stood up and waved his hat. There was a gradual settling down of the confusion, and as he stood there evidently waiting to be heard, the men soon became quiet again. Stuart admired his control of the crowd. Eric had great influence with it.

"Brothers," he said slowly, "I believe we have reached a critical point in this movement. Here is one of the owners who has expressed his willingness to grant our demands. The question now is, Shall the Champion men go back to their mines while the rest continue to deal with the other owners? This is a question for the union to settle."

"Eric," spoke Stuart in a low tone as he stood close by him, "let me say a word or two more, will you? I believe the decision of the men today will be a serious one, and I want to do all I can to make it right."

Eric at once raised his voice. "Men, Mr. Duncan wants to say a word again. I am sure you will give him a careful hearing."

"Aye, that we will!"

"He's no bad for a millionaire!"

"Give him a chance. He doesn't often have it!" shouted a voice with a touch of irony in it.

Stuart took advantage of the lull that followed these and other shouts to speak as he had never thought of doing when he came to the park. He believed that the result of the men's action would be exceedingly important for themselves and himself. He had never had such a great desire to explain his own attitude toward the whole problem of labor and capital as it affected him.

It is not possible to describe his speech. Eric thought at the time that it was the best speech he had ever heard from a moneyed man. At times it was impassioned, then quiet and conversational. It is doubtful if very many of the miners understood it as Stuart meant. He was in reality voicing a policy for the men of money which he afterward followed out with some changes.

This much he made clear to the men: He sympathized with their demands for larger wages, while he could not agree with their methods, and he would do all in his power to give them their just demands as far as he was at liberty to act independently. He told them he was going to Cleveland the next day to confer with the other mine owners and would use all his influence to get the others to agree to the rise in wages. He repeated his offer to treat with the thousand or more men employed in the Champion mines at any time they chose to return. As he closed he made an appeal to the men to use reason and spoke of the religious influence that so far had prevailed for the good of the community.

There ran through the whole of Stuart's speech this second time a passionate desire to be understood as a man before men. He had never before had such a longing to be understood; neither had he ever felt the gap between himself and the men to be so wide and deep. As has been said, it is doubtful if parts of his speech were understood at all by the men.

As soon as he finished there was a great uproar of applause and shouts. Eric himself could not restore quiet. The committee politely asked Stuart to leave the park while the union went into a conference over his proposals. Stuart was glad to get away. He felt exhausted with his unusual effort.

It was 3 o'clock in the afternoon when Eric came to the house with the news of the decision reached by the miners' union. Stuart at once saw by his face that the situation was serious.

"The men voted by a large majority not to go back to work till all could go back on the same terms—that is, they demanded that all the mine owners recognize the union and make terms with it for all the men."

"Do you mean that the men who work in the Champion mines refuse to accept any offer of the wages they demand?"

"Yes—that is, the Champion miners will not go back until the other owners make the same terms you make and make them to the union."

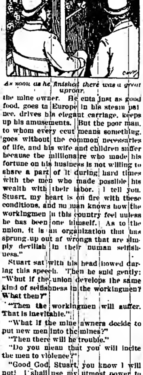
"Which means simply that this strike is a deadlock," replied Stuart decidedly, "for I know the men at Cleveland, and they will never agree to any such terms."

"The miners will not agree to any other." Eric spoke quietly, but sadly.

"Eric," said Stuart suddenly after a pause, "tell me frankly, as brother to brother, is this a reasonable step for the men to take? Do you believe the union will make anything by such action? Is it just or fair?"

Eric's face worked under a passionate feeling. Then he said: "The men have a right to combine for mutual support. In this instance they feel driven to it by their condition. Why should not labor seek to defend itself as capital does? You—that is, I mean the mine owners generally—get together in a combine and fix wages. Why should not the miners get together and have a say about it? We have been working for years at the price set by men at a distance who never saw a mine or a miner, far less went down into the ground to see what the labor is. These men sit in nice upholstered offices in elegant buildings and make it their business to get just as much out of the iron ore as they can. The wages of the men are cut every time ore falls in price. Instead of taking it out of their own large dividends in the years when they have made enormous profits every time there is a depression in the market they cut this end instead of theirs. You know this is the case, Stuart.

"Three years ago a dozen men in the iron industry grew to be millionaires from the profits of this metal which God put in the ground for the common use of man. During that year the miners received only fair wages. Since then financial depression and a drop in the price of ore have followed. What do those men do who have in prosperous years made their fortunes? Do they say, 'We will draw on this reserve, and in order that the miners may not suffer we will declare smaller dividends and lose something?' No; they say at once, 'Cut down wages, because ore is cheaper, and we cannot afford to lose.' And who suffers? Not the mine owner. He eats just as good food, goes to Europe in his steam palace, drives his elegant carriage, keeps up his amusements. But the poor man, to whom every cent means something, goes without the common necessaries of life, and his wife and children suffer because the millionaire who made his fortune on his business is not willing to share a part of it during hard times with the men who made possible his wealth with their labor. I tell you, Stuart, my heart is on fire with these conditions, and no man knows how the workingmen in this country feel unless he has been one himself. As to the union, it is an organization that has sprung up out of wrongs that are simply devilish in their human selfishness."



As soon as he finished there was a great uproar.

Stuart sat with his head bowed during this speech. Then he said gently: "What if the union develops the same kind of selfishness in the workingmen? What then?"

"Then the workingmen will suffer. That is inevitable."

"What if the mine owners decide to put new men into the mines?"

"Then there will be trouble."

"Do you mean that you will incite the men to violence?"

"Good God, Stuart, you know I will not! I shall use my utmost power to prevent anything of the kind."

"But what if it cannot be prevented?"

Eric said nothing. His face changed with a torrent of feeling and passion.

"If it comes to that, let God be judge if the owners and not the men are really the ones most to blame. I shall use all my influence to prevent violence or lawlessness. The union has a right to combine for such wages as it thinks are just. It has no right to prevent other men from working at any wages they choose to take. Since I joined the Salvation Army I have become convinced that the only permanent basis for any true settlement of labor and capital differences must be a religious basis—that is, Christian."

Stuart listened with an interest he felt to be genuine. "How did you happen to join the Salvation Army, Eric?"

"It's a long story. I'll tell you some time, not now."

"I've heard part of it, but I want you to tell me all of it."

"I can't now. I must go. I have hardly had a minute's time to myself since this movement came on. I must be going now. You leave for Cleveland"—

"Tonight. I want to be there tomorrow. I can tell beforehand what the companies will say. Is there no other way out of it?"

"I don't see any," replied Eric.

The two men shook hands silently, and Eric went out.

Stuart went down on the night express and next day at Cleveland was in conference with the other owners. The result of the conference was what he had anticipated. The terms of the union were rejected. It was decided by the other owners that a force of men should be at once placed at work with steam shovels on the stock piles so as to move the ore, and in case there was trouble the troops would be called out. Stuart refused to take action on his own mines. He would not yet precipitate matters by getting new men either for the stock piles or the mines. He came back home the next day with the feeling that he was at present in a condition of indecision and waiting. He could not sympathize with the strike, he did not believe the union was wise in refusing to let the Champion miners go to work, and he could not help feeling that a great calamity of some kind was impending.

It was two days after his return that the event occurred which really shaped and molded his whole after life. The mines were still manned by pump men. They had not been called out by the union, for the reason that if once the water in the mines rose above the different levels and flowed in among the timbers the mines would become ruined, and the loss would be as heavy for the miners as the owners in case the strike ended and work was again resumed. From six to eight men remained at each mine. There were an engineer, an assistant engineer, two firemen and three or four pump men, according to the size and number of pumps. These were kept going day and night, as the water rose very rapidly if left to flow.

Stuart had gone up to the Davis mine, one of the newer ventures of his father and recently developed. Its greatest depth was 900 feet. It had a manhole with ladders and a shaft at some distance from it for the "skip" or iron carriage used for hauling ore to the surface. There were six men at this mine in charge at this time.

Stuart had come to the engine house and was talking with the engineer when Eric came in.

Stuart called him over to the dryroom, where the miners changed their clothing for miner's dress.

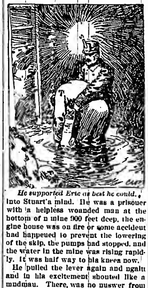
"Eric, I want to go down into the mine. Won't you go with me? I want to see again for myself what the work is, and besides there is a new pump at the bottom that I want to look at."

Eric consented, and the two soon had on the miner's dress and were going down the ladders. It was getting late in the afternoon, and they left orders with the engineer that when they gave the signal from the bottom he might let down the skip, and they would come up in that.

For an hour they explored different levels. Stuart was restless and seemed intent on realizing as fully as possible just how the miners worked. He climbed up into difficult places and even fired off a blast in one chamber, using one of the powder sticks left by the men when they came out.

At last he and Eric stood at the bottom of the mine. This was an excavation about 14 feet across, and the water ran in very much as if it had been a cistern. By leaning back against the ladders the light from 900 feet above could be seen. Eric was sitting thus with his back to the ladder rounds and his feet in the water which ran over the floor of the mine about four inches deep and Stuart was examining the pump at the other side of the shaft when a terrible thing happened. A noise like the roar of a torrent grew about these two men, and before Eric could get out from his position against the ladders a mass of iron ore came rushing down the manhole, breaking out rounds of the ladders as it fell, and, bounding from side to side, struck Eric on the shoulders with terrific force and threw him face downward in the water.

Stuart was at his side in a moment. He raised him and by the light of the candle in his hat saw the nature of the accident. He could not think whether the mass had fallen or been thrown purposely into the shaft. He dragged Eric away from the foot of the ladder. He was seriously injured. With the one thought of getting him to the top as soon as possible Stuart seized the lever at the bottom of the ore shaft and pulled it back as a signal to the engineer to let down the skip. There was no answering signal, and Stuart pulled the wire rope again. Still no answer. He looked up through the main shaft. What was that? The pump had suddenly stopped below. But what was that great light at the top? It must be nearly sundown now. Something was on fire! The truth flashed upon him that the engine house over the main shaft was on fire. The ladders afforded escape for a man possibly, but not incumbered with a body, and a dead body perhaps at that. Stuart dashed water in Eric's face, and he groaned. He was not dead, but unconscious. And then the whole situation forced itself into Stuart's mind. He was a prisoner with a helpless wounded man at the bottom of a mine 900 feet deep, the engine house was on fire or some accident had happened to prevent the lowering of the skip, the pumps had stopped, and the water in the mine was rising rapidly. It was half way to his knees now.



He supported Eric as best he could.

He pulled the lever again and again and in his excitement shouted like a madman. There was no answer from above. The manhole ladders were still clear. Even as they were, with the broken places, he was strong and vigorous and could climb out. But not with the burden of Eric. At that moment a charred fragment of wood floated down the ore shaft and dropped hissing in the water. He realized that he stood in the presence of death. He offered a prayer for help. He supported Eric as best he could. The water was now above his knees and rapidly rising.

CHAPTER III.

THE RESCUE.

As the facts of his position forced themselves more clearly upon him, the first excitement over, Stuart grew calmer. The candle in his hat was nearly burned out, but he had another one that, after the fashion of the miners, he had thrust into his boot when he changed his dress in the dryroom. He pulled this out and lighted it, putting it in the candle holder in place of the piece so nearly gone.

Then he looked at the ladders carefully. The mass of broken ore which had fallen down the manhole had broken out a dozen rounds at the very foot of the ladder. By stretching up to his full height Stuart could just reach an unbroken round.

But what could he do with the dead weight of Eric? He could never lift him up that distance. For once and only one swift second Stuart considered the thought of leaving Eric. It was simply the love of life asserting itself. Why should both men die? His death would not save Eric. It was only a second, and then he felt the shock of a statement he made to himself that life was not worth having if certain memories had always to be carried with one. He could never abandon the man who had once risked his life to save him, when the danger was fully as great as now.

"But, O God," Stuart cried out, "to die drowned like a rat in a hole!" The love of life was strong in him. He felt the water rising more and more rapidly. It was nearly to his waist now. He felt the blood from the wound in his shoulder warming his own side as he held up the unconscious body. Once in awhile Eric stirred. Once he opened his eyes, and Stuart thought he was recovering. If only he could regain enough strength to help himself even a little! Stuart's mind went into a whirl as he thought of all possible ways to pull himself and Eric up even a short distance. But the bottom of the mine was of such a shape that there were no projections or slopes which afforded even a foothold.

The fire at the top was evidently blazing fiercely. Fragments of charred wood dropped down the ore shaft. Leaning over and looking up, Stuart could see a great flaming mass of twisted beams and iron rods curling over the mouth of the shaft. He moved over under the manhole, dragging Eric with him, and looked up that. The flames and smoke were sweeping over it like mist over a ridge. He thought that even at that distance he could see that the ladders at the top had caught and were blazing fantastically.

He gave up all hope. Still, with the instinct of life strong in him, he dragged Eric over to the pump, which stood just out of the water now, and by the exercise of all his strength he managed to place the body upon it in such a way that it was two or three feet above himself as he stood on the bottom of the floor of the mine. The water had risen now to his armpits and was whirling around him in a great red pool. He shuddered. It looked so like blood in the light of the candle. The movement he had made with Eric, together with the contact with the cold water, had roused him. He stirred and even spoke feebly.

"Where are we?" he muttered.

"You have been hurt, Eric."

Eric groaned and closed his eyes. Then he opened them again, and the sight of Stuart's pale face seemed to tell him a part of the truth. The water was running over the hand of his right arm, which hung down helpless from his wounded shoulder. He raised himself, evidently with the greatest difficulty.

"You will drown. Leave me. I am dying anyway."

"No, no, Eric. I will not leave you here alone!" Stuart spoke calmly, almost cheerfully. Eric's face was drooping over close to Stuart's shoulder. Stuart kissed his cheek and at that very moment he heard a man's voice, the sweetest sound he ever heard, echoing down the ladder shaft.

He shouted back in reply and waited. Again the cry came in response. Some one was coming down the ladders to the rescue. Whoever he was he was evidently coming as fast as the nature of the passage would allow, for the next time the cry was uttered Stuart could hear words of encouragement and then a voice speaking from the point where the last round of the ladder remained, saying very distinctly and in even precise English, "Who is there?"

"It is I, Stuart Duncan. I am here with Eric, and he is hurt and helpless. I can't lift him up alone."

"I always believed in being on time," replied the voice. "If you can move up under the foot of the shaft I will throw you this rope."

Stuart lifted Eric from his position and plunged over toward the ladder hole. The water was above his shoulders. A rope was thrown, and he secured it under Eric, who had again fainted from the pain and shock. Then with an exercise of strength and skill such as men possess in times of facing death, the two men, one above and one below, succeeded in drawing Eric up, and the man above secured him somehow, while Stuart, using the sides of the ladder for support, pulled himself out of that watery grave.

He was not a minute too soon, for the water was flowing in more rapidly now, and the large cavity at the bottom being almost filled the torrent began to rise in the shafts very fast. He had no time to ask any questions of his rescuer. All three were in great peril. The ladders were blazing above them and the water rising below them. With superhuman exertions they lifted Eric up. When they came to places where the ladders were badly broken, they were obliged to use their utmost skill to move the body in safety. Once they were so long about starting up again that the water caught up with them, and Stuart, who was the last one, felt the torrent swirling around his feet.

At last, after a struggle that left them completely exhausted, they reached the first drift from the bottom. There was a wooden platform here, and the drift ran out into the sides of the hill several hundred feet. Stuart and his unknown rescuer leaned a moment panting against the side of the wall, while Eric lay on the platform to all appearances lifeless.

"We can't stay here long," gasped Stuart. "See the water coming up!"

He pointed down the black well from which they had climbed so painfully. The rushing water and the falling in of ore banks made a terrifying uproar about them.

"We can get out on this level," replied his companion.

"What! How's that? We are 800 feet below ground here."

"The old Beury shaft opens into this drift. I walked in here this afternoon myself. Here is where I heard you shout for help. There! Don't you feel that breeze blowing through the drift?"

Stuart turned his face and felt the passing of a cool wave of air. And then it flashed across his memory that several years before, when a boy, he had himself climbed down into the old Beury shaft, which opened up on the side of the hill, and made his way to the level of the Davis mine where he now stood. The mines were sometimes connected in this way, though the abandoned passage would often become choked and blocked up by falling masses of ore.

But there was no time to lose, even with this unexpected avenue of escape. The two men caught up Eric and hurried as fast as their burden would allow up the passage connecting the main with the deserted shaft. After walking with their burden about 200 feet the drift turned abruptly to the right and began to ascend sharply. It grew more difficult to carry Eric, but the danger from the water was now over. The old passage was really a tunnel let into the side of the hill at a sharp incline instead of a shaft sunk down vertically from above. When they had reached a point above the immediate reach of the water, they sank down exhausted again, and by the flickering light Stuart first noticed who his rescuer was.

"I haven't any cards with me, but I'll introduce myself," he said in a tone that made Stuart smile, and yet there was nothing flippant or lacking in seriousness about the man. "I am the new minister at the church with the clock in the tower—St. John's. I arrived in Champion two days ago. My name is Andrew Burke. You are Mr. Duncan, the mine owner? I am glad to meet you."

He reached out his hand, and Stuart took it, clasping it over the body of Eric. He felt a strange thrill as he did so. Somehow the peculiar formality of the man's speech struck him as a token of a special kind of strength. He seemed to feel that here was a man who, whatever his oddities, was possessed of qualities that were really very rare and valuable.

"I owe you my life and that of my friend here," he said. "It all seems very strange to me, your appearance. I had given myself up for lost. I should certainly have drowned if you had not appeared."

"Yes; I think you would—that is, unless you had left the body of your friend here, and you don't look like the kind of man to do that. But we ought to move on. We need to get him to the doctor as soon as possible. My appearance here is very simple, and I can tell that afterward. Shall we move on?"

Stuart eagerly assented, and they stumbled on up the tunnel. Their progress was very slow, for Eric was entirely a dead weight, and neither Stuart nor his companion was a powerful man physically. They had gone but a short distance, however, when lights appeared farther up the shaft, and soon they were surrounded by a group of miners, accompanied by Dr. Saxon.

There was no time for more than the briefest explanations. The party took Eric from Stuart and the minister, and soon they were standing out on the side of the hill in the starlight. The cool night air blew about Stuart, and he thanked God for his life. Farther up on the hill a heap of blazing ruins marked the place where the engine house had stood, while at a distance the ladder hole smoked and flamed like a small volcano, showing that the timbers were blazing fiercely below.

"Take Eric to my house. We are not far from it," said Stuart.

"Yes, and hurry up, men," added the doctor. "I'll go on ahead with them, Stuart. Eric needs attention as soon as possible."

The doctor and the miners with Eric hurried down the hill, while Stuart followed with the minister as fast as he could. But now that the strain was over he felt weak and faint.

"You must come in and stop with me tonight, Mr. Burke. I want to know the story of your appearance in the mine. And, besides, I have not had time to thank you."

"I shall be glad to accept your invitation. In fact, I feel the need of washing up before I go back to the town. I am stopping at the hotel," replied Burke.

As the two walked along, picking their way slowly down the narrow path, a peculiar noise came wafted up to them from the town. Stuart paused and listened.

"What's that?" he asked.

"Troops. They arrived this afternoon. That must be the drumbeat to quarters."

"I supposed the troops would not start until the last of the week. I had information to that effect from Cleveland."

"They came this afternoon, and that is one reason for your friend's injury, I imagine. We will talk it over and see." There was a pause, and the Rev. Andrew Burke suddenly exclaimed in a tone of relief, as if he had been searching for something: "Ah, here they are! I thought perhaps I had lost them."

"What's that?" asked Stuart, peering through the darkness toward something his companion was holding out in his hand.

"Black ore crystals. Very rare specimens. If you have a match about you, I will show you."

Stuart could not help laughing. After all, was he not alive and safe after that experience of terror?

"I am afraid," he said, "that any matches I might have about me would hardly go off after the soaking I had. You see, I was in the water up to my neck a part of the time."

"I beg your pardon," replied Andrew Burke. He seemed ashamed, and then

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

PHIL. A. KAFFER.

$50,000 FOR DRAINAGE.

A St. Paul report says the efforts of the members of the legislature from the Red River Valley to secure an appropriation to continue the work of drainage, have resulted in securing one half of the sum asked.

The bill was drawn for an appropriation of $100,000, and was introduced in the house, as the senate was known to be favorable to the project, having passed a bill for the appropriation two years ago that died in the lower house.

Thursday the house committee on appropriations recommended the bill for passage after cutting the amount down to $50,000.

This amount, while not up to the desires of the members from the valley, and too small to give adequate results in the prosecution of new work, will be sufficient to care for the ditches already secured, and will do considerable toward extending the work

It is understood that a special appropriation will be granted for the work of opening the channel of Lost River, which will redeem thousands of acres of overflowed lands bordering that stream in eastern Polk and Beltrami counties.

STATE POPULISTS.

Victor E. Lawson, editor of the Willmar Tribune, chairman of the Peoples Party State Central Committee, sends the following authoritative statement, explaining that he does so because the action of the committee has been misinterpreted by some of the daily newspapers:

The People's State Central Committee met at St. Paul last Friday evening and discussed the condition of the party organization. The members present were determined that the organization should be preserved. A resolution, recommending that hereafter the peoples party nominate a national ticket of its own, was passed. Such a step is considered necessary if the integrity of the organization is to be maintained. Considerable enthusiasm was manifested and means were pledged from the counties represented for the preliminary work of the party in better working order. There was no unfriendly criticism of allied political forces, nor of leaders whom the populists have supported. The action of the committee is consistent with the declarations made by the conventions of the party in which co operation was agreed to but not at the sacrifice of the organization.

H. Larke, who has become well known to the people of the Northwest in his capacity as assistant general passenger agent of the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic railroad, has been appointed as general agent of the Dominion mail steamship line at Minneapolis. Mart Adson has succeeded Mr. Larke and there are congratulations due all around. Mr. Adson is no less popular and efficient than Mr. Larke himself.

Warren is up in arms against the proposed division of Marshall county. Warren is foolish. Thief River Falls may form an alliance with Stephen or Argyle and not only carry division but move the county seat as well. Red Lake Falls has always stood ready to aid Thief River Falls and a proposed division allowing them the north tier of Red Lake county townships would carry unanimously in this end of the county— as to more than that territory, that is another matter.

MINNESOTA BUTTER.

"Minnesota can certainly be classed among the great butter-producing regions of the world," said Maj. Henry E. Alvord, chief of the dairy division of the United States department of agriculture, who was in charge of the American dairy exhibits at the Paris exposition.

"This state took more prizes than any other state over in Paris and obtained the gold medal in competition with the world. Here, too, you make a larger proportion of creamery butter than in any other state. Dairying is comparatively a new industry for the Northwest, but you've gone to work in scientific fashion, and you've attained remarkable success.

"The Minnesota butter exhibited at Paris was was every bit as good as the best of the famous Danish butter—and, even a trifle better, or you wouldn't have got the gold medal. It's not likely, though, that the average product of Minnesota butter-makers could compete successfully with the average product of the Danish makers! Because the Danes have achieved a surprising uniformity of quality in their dairy productions. That, no doubt, is due to the strict governmental supervision exercised there over the butter industry. Samples from every factory are examined frequently by government experts, who at once inform the manufacturers of any falling off in the quality of their product and the precise reason for that defect."

Like Oliver Twist, children ask for more when given One Minute Cough Cure. Mothers endorse it highly for croup. It quickly cures all coughs and colds and every throat and lung trouble. It is a specific for grippe and asthma and has long been a well known remedy for whooping cough. W. A. Schreiter.

THE LANCE IN WARFARE.

At Present It Is Not Very Dangerous —Wounds Can Be Easily Cured.

When the war in the Transvaal broke out Dr. Frederick Schaffer, a distinguished German army surgeon, obtained permission to accompany the British troops, his object being to ascertain to what extent the lance is effective as a weapon in war. During the campaign he devoted his entire attention to this subject, and now he has returned home and forwarded to his government an official report thereon.

In it he says that wounds caused by a lance are not dangerous and are easily cured, and that the reason is because the iron point of the weapon is round and therefore passes through the organs of the body without injuring them to any great extent. "Being such a humane weapon," he points out, "the lance is by no means as valuable in war as is generally supposed. Nevertheless it can be made a dangerous weapon by merely changing the form of its point, and if the military authorities decide to retain it as a portion of the equipment of cavalry this should certainly be done."

This suggestion is exciting a good deal of comment in Europe. The Frankfort Gazette, apparently appalled at the thought of transforming a humane weapon into a cruel one, says sarcastically: "We propose that the point of the lance be made of such a shape that it will lacerate every organ in the body and render the cure of every wound utterly impossible. Furthermore, it will be well for the authorities to seriously consider the advisability of impregnating the point of the lance with some deadly poison."

BURIED HOUSES IN MEXICO.

Rare Discovery Made by Mormon Archaeologists in the Garcia Valley.

A dispatch from the City of Mexico, Mexico, says: The party of Mormon archaeologists and students who left Provo City, Utah, nearly a year ago on an overland trip to Valparaiso, Chili have arrived here. They spent some time in the Garcia valley, in the state of Chihuahua, where they made some extensive excavations and explorations of ancient ruins which had never before been visited by archaeologists. Prof. Benjamin Cluff, who is in charge of the party, said: "We found a great number of mounds in the Garcia valley, the date of which is unknown. In the mounds which we excavated we found some well-built houses made of stone, well plastered and most of them having cement floors. The houses usually consisted of two to four rooms, though some of them were larger. The houses were always in groups or villages, never alone. The whole side of the mountain had evidently been under cultivation, and every ridge had a line of houses. In front at the side of each house we found a wall or terrace from one to six feet high, which had been leveled and used evidently as a garden spot. Down the hillsides and along ravines we found these terraces at regular intervals. They had apparently served as reservoirs for the valley below. In the houses we found crockery, stone implements and invariably charcoal. In a cave we found some scraps of excellent woolen cloth and also of flax or linen cloth. It is clear to us from our investigations that the cave dwellers and the mound dwellers were the same people."

AVERAGE MAN IS IMPORTANT.

On His Well-Being Depends the Progress of Every Civilized Nation.

The average man rules the nation, says Mme. Sarah Grand in the London Express. Elevate the individual and you make the nation great. It is a truism, but, like most truisms, will bear repetition:

"By contrasting the condition of countries in which the majority of the people are gagged and enslaved with that of countries in which wealth and freedom are more equally distributed we have learned the fact that it is not riches of the rich nor the poverty of the poor, but the position and the character and the conduct of your average mere man that gives its tone to a nation—the mere man who asks but to be allowed to live as a decent human being asks for a time of honorable toil, for a time of rest, for love and affection, for wife and children—for a life of dignity, an old age of pleasant memories, a happy death?

"When that is the honest ambition of the mere man of a nation that nation must be great. Given the condition of mere man, does he progress or is he downtrodden and oppressed and you have the condition of the nation and its place in the estimation of the world.

"This being the case, it is obvious that progress depends upon the elevation of the masses, and it is toward that end that all right thinking people in power will direct their energies in the days to come—that end universal federation, which shall make obsolete the retrograde power of patriotism, and result in peace on earth and good will among all nations."

Changing Significance of a Word.

The word preposterous originally meant a process of reversing the natural order of things, such as indicated by the common expression "putting the cart before the horse." By an easy gradation it has come to be used in its present significance.

INDIANS INDIGNANT

REPORTED THAT CERTAIN LUMBERMEN ARE CUTTING GREEN PINE TIMBER.

Soo Canal Leads the World's Artificial Waterways—Minnesota Gets First Prize in the Buttermakers' Contest. Three Boys Killed in a Biwabik Mine—Pelican Rapids Merchant Suicides—State News in General.

White Earth, Minn., Feb. 28.—Considerable indignation prevails among the Chippewas on the White Earth reservation over the report brought in by messengers that loggers and contractors of dead-and-down timber were indiscriminately cutting large quantities of green standing pine, and it is further reported that several lumber camps are on the reservation; that fully 50 per cent of the timber cut thus far this winter has been green standing pine. It is learned that several of the leading chiefs recently assembled in council at the agency and protested against the indiscriminate cutting down of the green standing pine on the reservation, and urged that an investigation be at once instituted to ascertain the extent of the oft-repeated abuse.

SOO LEADS THE WORLD.

Twenty-five Millions Tons of Freight Passed Through Last Year.

Duluth, Feb. 27.—Enough freight was carried through the Sault canals, at the outlet to Lake Superior, the past season to make a freight bill of $25,000,000. And this was the amount, though the price per ton for each mile carried was the almost infinitesimal figure of 1.18 mills. This is less than half the cost of freight carriage on the most economically managed and cheapest road in the United States, and yet it is considered more than the corresponding lake rate in any year since 1892.

While the Sault canal, carrying its share of what articles pass between the Lake Superior region and the northeastern part of the United States, did such a business, moving 25,543,000 tons of freight, the Suez canal moved only 40 per cent as much. It is open the entire year and is the artery for the commerce of a hemisphere. The Sault is by that much the greatest artificial waterway on the globe.

MINNESOTA IS FIRST.

Award of the Prize Banner to Kansas Due to an Error.

St. Paul, Feb. 27.—The remarkable triumph of Minnesota at the recent national convention of the creamery buttermakers has been unexpectedly completed by the telegraphic announcement that the silk banner for the highest state average of butter scores belongs not to Kansas, as awarded, but to the Gopher state. An error on the part of Secretary Sudendorf of the Buttermakers' association gave the Kansas score as 89.44 and the Minnesota score as 89.39, while the correct score is 89.86. Thus, Minnesota instead of being .05 per cent below Kansas, is really .42 per cent above that state.

KILLED IN MINE SHAFT.

Three Boys Dashed to Death at Biwabik, Minn.

Biwabik, Minn., Feb. 27.—A terrible accident, resulting in the loss of three lives, occurred at the Elba mine, six miles from Biwabik. Five boys were riding a car which is used in the shaft. One of the boys turned the switch the wrong way and the car descended rapidly from the top of the shafthouse towards the shaft opening. One of the boys realized the danger and pulled his brother off the car in time to save him. The car crashed down the shaft opening, hurling the three young boys to the bottom of the shaft, killing them instantly. The boys were two sons of Joseph Felt, aged 10 and 12, respectively, and Andrew Schlakdich's son, aged about 8 years.

The flames then leaped across the street, burning every building in one block except the Bank of Park River and the building owned by J. Finseth & Co., both structures being brick.

SAD ACCIDENT

CHAS. JOHNSON RELATES ONE THAT BEFEL HIS COUSIN'S WIFE.

Chas. Johnson has returned from attendance at the Stillwater conference as a representative of the Sw. Luth. congregation here. He spent a few days in the twin cities during his absence, and relates the sad accident that befel his cousin's wife in Minneapolis during his stay. As he approached his cousin's home, (the latter also just returning home) the lady was just being saved from being burned alive, the whole house in flames, and she was pulled out of the burning building through a window by the firemen. She was badly burned and was at once taken to the hospital. In removing her clothing large patches of burned flesh, adhering to it, had to be torn off. It was not thought that she could recover.

Mr. Johnson is one of the foremost farmers of this section, and is credited with being a model manager. He has been a great traveler and close observer. He was prior to coming here for many years on the ocean, and knows well what it means to climb the masts of a ship. He has crossed the treacherous North Sea more than a dozen times.

* * *

The Ebenezer Y. P. society has in all its existence not had a member tread over the threshold into the sweet land of matrimony. Hold on! Can we say that longer? 'Tis asserted that recently something of that kind must have happened. One of our old bachelors, who takes a considerable interest in those affairs, well supplied with local weeklies, is always posted on who takes out a marriage license. He has found on that golden list the name of one of our society members, and was inquisitive to know whether the ceremony had taken place. Some had the information "under the rose." The minister was supposed to have been out hunting that day. Later the rumor as to the wedding was confirmed by a neighbor, who dined at the new home in the Saintly city. The Society can surely not withold congratulations and good wishes, and expects to have the details before long.

And now the valentine days of this year belong to the past. That comic kind has mostly been for the fun of it, and especially when an extra size envelope had been used, with an extra cent stamp expended, making it appear as if it were a mortgage, a lease, a land deed or some other very important paper, and in the inside in addition to the valentine, a ream or so of wrapping paper from a dry goods store.

Richard and Alex Melin left last Sunday for the woods in the north returning Thursday with a supply of building material. They say there's much more snow there and were amazed to see the dephth increased the further they got. They also report a greater want of hay and straw, and all stock in poor condition, bearing signs of starvation. There will be a temporary famine for cattle until the ground gets bare.

Oscar Lindquist, one of the highly esteemed young men of the "West Side" spent last Sunday afternoon at Bray, whence, still to the farther northwest, he sported his high spirited horses, as, while hoofs kept time to sleighbells' chime, he enjoyed the pleasant company of one of the charming young ladies of that part.

Nils Johnson has threshed two stacks of flax with flails this winter and has as a consequence very clean seed of that kind.

P. V. Sandberg says he has proved up his claim at Bemidji. Gust, his brother, has sold his out there for a good price.

Rev. Mattson left Friday for Winnipeg where he was to preach his first sermon last Sunday as pastor of his new congregation there.

Sam Leppert has removed his windmill on to his newly constructed barn which now makes a very serviceable piece of machinery.

Many farmers are worrying over how to feed their cattle the remaining part of the winter. The supply of hay and straw is about exhausted.

A butcher of Red Lake Falls was around trying to find some fat cattle the latter part of last week. He said it was very hard to get them in the condition he wanted them.

Charley Anderson a prominent and prosperous farmer of Bray, was seen a passenger via the Euclid and St. Hilaire trail, at a speedy gait with his highspirited nags, bound towards the Saintly city Friday.

Chas. Johnson says a peculiar sick spell siezed one of his horses last week. The animal was attacked suddenly while being led to water, biting, kicking and stamping around furiously. Prompt medical treatment gave relief at once.

AN EXPENSIVE WAR.

Direct Cost of the South African Struggle to England.

The Ultimate Outlay in Trying to Overcome the Boers Will Amount to a Mountain of Money.

The cost of the South African war has now so greatly exceeded the original estimates that practically no one in authority in England seems able to make a definite calculation of what it may ultimately amount to. The borrowing powers granted to the British government by the late parliament are nearly exhausted, and heavy arrears, amounting to between $200,000,000 and $250,000,000, are pressing for payment. Against these liabilities the government has about $75,000,000 immediately available, the unexhausted borrowing power amounting to $30,000,000 and the balance of loans issued yet to be paid up $45,000,000. Of the payments in arrears much consists of the pay due the army and debts to contractors.

The indirect cost has been estimated, and the result is highly interesting, says the New York Sun. In September last the shrinkage in value of the full list of securities quoted on the London stock exchange had, as a direct consequence of the war, reached the enormous figure of nearly $2,500,000,000. The decline in the market value of consols alone has been serious, and the fall has been equally marked in municipal stocks and railway and other obligations. The increase in the national debt with the additional taxation to meet the interest payments has also to be taken into account. Then there is the expense of the permanent garrison, estimated at 50,000 men, which will have to be kept up for an undetermined period out of the pocket of the British taxpayer, for there is no present visible source of revenue in South Africa from which the cost can be paid.

But the matter does not end here. The increase and the reorganization of the army have to be provided for, and millions will have to be spent in bringing the stores of ammunition and other war material up to the requirements of the new policy. Already orders for $30,000,000 worth of new guns have been placed, to be followed by others the amount of which has not yet been decided on.

It is not, however, in England only that the direct cost of the war is making itself felt by the taxpayers. The shortage of revenue in Cape Colony this year is estimated by the minister of finance at not less than $12,-15,000, which he proposes to borrow, though the reception which a proposal to raise a small loan in the London market a few months ago met with does not seem to encourage fresh applications in the same quarter. In the nature of things it will be some years before the waste and destruction worked by the war have been made good, and meantime the course of trade which in the past was favorable to Cape Colony will take other channels. Durban, in Natal, and Lorenzo Marques are so much nearer to Bloemfontein and Pretoria than Cape Town that supplies and traffic may be expected to take the shorter routes. This will affect the revenues of Cape Colony derivable from the railways.

No boom is to be looked for after the war is over, the sacrifices made by the Cape farmers or imposed on them having been too great to permit their launching out into extravagances of any kind for a long time to come. The reduction of the imperial expenditure consequent on the withdrawal from the country of the great portion of the British army will cause a sudden reduction in the trade depending on it and bring about a great curtailment of the profits of those engaged in it and on which they depend for their living. The latest accounts from the late Orange Free State describe it as reduced almost to the condition of a desert, the Boer homesteads in ruins and the flocks and herds either carried off to supply the wants of the army of occupation or scattered over the veldt, where they are a prey to the wild beasts that are making their appearance in considerable numbers as a result of the disappearance of the population. The cessation of the production of gold during the period of the war is also among the indirect losses caused by it.

WANTS IT KNOWN

CAPT. MCGRAIN'S LIFE WAS SAVED AND HE IS GRATEFUL.

WANTS THE GAZETTE TO TELL THE STORY OF HIS RESCUE.

Capt. Jas. McGrain is a well known resident of this section. His home is at 707 Cowing street, Crookston, and he has been in this city many times on his way up to Red Lake where he has in the past been captain of the steamer Martin Lally, plying the lake. In the summer of 1898 he fell ill, being bothered with dizzy spells to such an extent that he had several slight accidents as a result. In fact he had about given up hope, when he discovered he had on the steamer several packages of Kola Celery Tea which had been purchased at Schreiter's drug store, along with other medicines. He resolved to try it, and the results were simply marvelous. It made him a well man; and the captain in his enthusiasm requested the following affidavit published, for the good of humanity:

Capt. Jas. McGrain, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that in the summer of 1898 he fell ill. Had dizzy spells, head drooping, pains in back, nervous, and could not sleep. Seemed to be a physical wreck. Kola Celery Tea relieved all this permanently. Before taking it he could not even sign his name, and although he was prejudiced against it, he is glad to tell of the good it has done him. Twelve or fourteen others used it with benefits to his knowledge. Will do any one good. All these people praise it, and he cannot recommend it too highly.

SEED WHEAT

We have selected some very choice seed wheat, that we will sell or exchange. We have both pure Scotch Fife and Blue Stem, and it is free from all foul seed, cleaned ready for a seeder. This wheat was raised in the bottom lands near the Red River of the North, and is about as fine a sample of wheat as we have ever seen. We have tested samples of the wheat that has been damaged by rain and find that about only forty of fifty per cent of it will grow, and when it does grow it makes a very puny and inferior straw. As a matter of fact there are very few farmers who appreciate the value of a change of seed. They will go on year after year seeding the old, run out, cockly seed, when a good strong seed gives them from 2 to 3 bushels per acre more and it does not cost any more to plow, harrow, seed or harvest, and they would have a good seed wheat of their own the following year. Sample of this seed wheat can be seen at our office or at the Crompe Elevator.

C. G. RAPP ILL.

ALARMING NEWS RECEIVED SATURDAY FROM REPRESENTATIVE RAPP.

It has been known for some time that the health of Representative Rapp, of St. Hilaire, was none too good, but even the best informed were scarcely prepared for the statement given out Friday by two of the physicians in attendance that he could not live more than a few days. He has been confined to his room at the Merchants the past ten days, and has been under the care of St. Paul's best physicians, who pronounce his case as hopeless. Mr. Rapp wired for Dr. Watson Saturday but owing to the fact that there are several cases here demanding his presence, the doctor could not leave. It is hardly thought probable that Mr. Rapp can recover, and he himself has given up hope, although he does not anticipate the end will come as speedily as the attending physicians think. At present he is considerably improved, and is able to sit up occasionally.

SINKING.

REPRESENTATIVE RAPP CANNOT LIVE MANY HOURS.

Griggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, Minn., Mar. 14, 1901 Charles G. Rapp is dying. His case is absolutely hopeless, and his death may be looked for any day. The vacancy which will be caused by his death can be filled only by a special election.

Death of Ole B. Sather.

Ole B. Sather had lain at death's door for the past fortnight, with hemorrhage of the lungs. Monday his dwelling on Hamilton ave was discovered afire but not until the flames had made such progress that the kitchen was nearly consumed, and the flames were shooting up from the roof of the main building, which was a one story cottage. Mrs. Sather ran for assistance to the neighbors. There was not a man in sight, but Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Tousley came to her assistance, and they carried the dying man from the burning house, as the cinders and sparks were dropping from the ceiling in the bed room. The home of Rev. S. J. S. Moore, adjoining, was thrown open to the unfortunate family. The sick man rallied from the schock temporarily, but died at 3:15 the following morning. He leaves a wife, and two children aged six and four years respectively.

The remains were escorted to the G.N. depot yesterday afternoon by members of Clearwater lodge I. O. O. F. and shipped to Winthrop, the home of Mrs. Sather's father, for interment, accompanied by the widow and children, Stephen Johnson, her brother, and K. A. Sather, brother of deceased.

Deceased was 34 years of age, and had been a resident of this city less than six months. He carried $4,500 insurance in old line and fraternal life insurance companies.

MCPeak Recovering.

Mrs. Jas. McPeek returned to the city Friday and will remain here, anticipating the arrival of her husband within a week or two. It will be remembered that Mr. McPeek was the victim of a hand car accident last fall, and was taken to the Brainerd hospital for treatment. After undergoing several operations it was feared he would still have to lose his leg, but under date of March 6 he writes that he is at last on the road to recovery. His leg was not amputated. He is able to walk with crutches and is now gaining at the rate of five or six pounds a week.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our heartfelt thanks to the citizens of Red Lake Falls for the kind assistance rendered us during our late misfortune and for the liberal contribution of funds and clothing which we have received and particularly do we thank those who headed the move and did the soliciting in our behalf.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter K. Olson.

Died Suddenly.

Robert Sutor, one of the large farmers residing near Fosston, fell dead last Tuesday evening in the office of Dr. Dunlop of Crookston. He had been in the hospital for some time being treated and had been out but a few days. Tuesday he took a trip to Wylie to visit Commissioner Jas. Sutor and other relatives and was feeling well. Returning in the evening he went to the office of Dr. Dunlop, which is located up stairs. The exertion proved more than he could stand, and fell dead on entering the office. He had been specially warned by his physicians against climbing stairs as his heart was very weak, but he felt that he was all right and disobeyed instructions with fatal results.

IMPORTANT SALE.

RED LAKE LOGGING ROAD HAS BEEN SOLD TO THE N. P. R. R.

An important sale made last week was that of the logging road of the Red Lake Transportation company, which is identical with the contracting firm of Halvorsen & Richards, of Minneapolis, which is constructing the Minnesota & International road from Bemidji to Koochiching, a road popularly known as the Brainerd & Northern extension of the Northern Pacific Road.

The railroad purchased is a logging road built by the Halvorson & Richards company between Nebish, the headquarters, and Red Lake, where the company had a steamboat line across the lake to the Red Lake river. The line is about fifteen miles and was constructed three years ago for the purpose of logging the Red Lake reservation for Shevlin, Carpenter & Co., and T. B. Walker, of the Twin Cities. The lumber companies have about 300,000,000 feet to log in the district and the contract with the road includes a yearly haul of 30,000,000 feet. Probably one-third of the timber has been taken out. It is not known whether the sale will carry with it the logging contracts. The road is to be delivered to the Northern Pacific company completed to the new line of the Minnesota and International road, which will mean the construction of an additional fifteen miles of new road this coming summer. The purchase of the logging road and its connections will give the Northern Pacific an outlet to Red Lake and into a heavily timbered district. The Halvorson Richard's company is now laying rails on the extension of the Northern Pacific and by the end of next summer will have about sixty miles of the new road built toward Koochiching.

Worse and Worse.

John Johnson, the Red Lake Falls star route mail carrier, sent his boy out on the trip yesterday, and he proceeded to acquire a jag. He claims that while he was holding fast to a roll of $30, one Knute Olson persuaded him that the money would be a good deal safer in Olson's hands and that he would keep it for Johnson. He turned it over and today Olson refused to return it. Johnson secured his arrest. Judge Holt is hearing the case this afternoon.—Crookston Times.

BENJAMIN HARRISON DEAD

Ex-President Harrison Passed Away Last Evening at 4:45 o'clock After an Illness of One Week.

Death From Pneumonia.---Funeral Sunday.

Indianapolis, Ind., Mar. 14, 1901. Former President Benjamin Harrison passed away without a struggle last evening at 4:45 o'clock, surrounded by the immediate members of the family and physicians, after an illness of only a week, with pneumonia. He had been unconscious several hours before his death. The body will lie in state Saturday at the capitol, and the funeral will take place Sunday. Word has been received from President McKinley that he will attend.

Benjamin Harrison was born in North Bend, Ohio, Aug. 20, 1833. He graduated from Miami University in 1852. Was elected reporter of supreme court of Indiana, serving from 1860 to '62, and was reelected two years later while serving in the Civil War. He was a member of the Mississippi river commission from '79 to '81, elected U. S. Senator in '81 and served until '87. The crowning of his fame came in 1888, when he was elected President of the United States, serving from March, 1889, to March, 1893.

THEY READ.

THEY HAVE HEARD OF THE LAND BOOM AND ARE STIFFENING ON PRICES.

The Thief River Falls Commercial club recently circulated the report that the Red Lake Indians would sell their lands at $2.50 per acre. Now the Reds are out with a denial and have written the following letter to the Crookston Times.

Red Lake Reservation, Mar. 4, 1901.

Sir: Will you be kind enough to write a protest against the opening of the eleven towns of our reservation. Your paper stated last issue that we Indians were perfectly willing to sell our land for the sum, yes the small sum of $2.50 per acre. All of this is false, and comes to us and takes us all by surprise. We Indians have never dreamed or thought of anything of the kind. Hon. Congressman Eddy has never been here to meet us. We do not know the man. The Thief River Falls Commercial Club is carrying matters to extremes. We Indians are all excited over the matter and such a move should not be made, unless congress amends the Nelson Act and makes another treaty with us. We hope you can make a good item from our poor composition, and you cannot make the protest too strong as each member of our reservation are dead against any such move.

GAME WARDENS START FOR ST. PAUL WITH THEIR CAPTURE.

Crookston, Minn., March 12. State Agent Fullerton, of the game commission; Secretary Meeker, and Attorney R. J. Montague, of Crookston, returned to Crookston from Warren last night, accompanied by Game Wardens Riddle, Murphy and Stevens, who had in charge Fred and Henry Cook and Geo. Wilcox, the game poachers arrested north of Red Lake last week, whom they are taking to Bemidji for trial. They also had evidence against the offenders consisting of twenty five heads of caribou, deer and moose, a large quantity of hides, guns and a carcass of a moose freshly killed. The stuff was all taken to St. Paul by Sam Fullerton, while the prisoners were turned over to Sheriff Bailey, of Beltrami county.

Sheriff Sampson, of this city, has been given some prominence in connection with the above affair, but says serenely, in reply to criticisms, that he was merely doing his duty, and he is not alarmed over the threats being made.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER;

Or, Christian Stewardship.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong," "Robert Hardy's Seven Days," "Malcom Kirk," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1896, BY CONGREGATIONAL AND SUNDAY SCHOOL PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

as they were going up the avenue to the house he said gently: "You see, I was out on a little geologizing walk this afternoon, and that is how I came to explore the old Beury tunnel. I found these crystals and was just putting them into my pocket when I heard your cry for help. I was kneeling on the floor of the tunnel and had my head near the side of the wall at the time, else I doubt if I had heard you. So perhaps you will not think I am altogether a crank on specimens if in this instance the hunt for them led to something better."

He reached out his hand and Stuart took it.

"It was a fortunate find for us," replied Stuart. "Eric and I shall always bless you for your search. I am anxious about him. Come right in, and I will have one of the servants show you a room where you can be at home for the night."

They hurried in only a little after the doctor and the miners, and Stuart, after directing one of the servants to see to Mr. Burke, went to Eric. The doctor was examining and dressing the wound.

"He has had a hard blow. Nothing fatal. We will pull him through. You had better get off those wet duds and look out for yourself. Thank God, Stuart, you are alive! This is the beginning of troubles here, I'm afraid. There has been crooked work today up on the hill, or I'm mistaken. That rock never fell down the ladder hole by accident, and the engine house didn't burn without some one's help."

Stuart looked thoughtful. He was still in the miner's dress, and if the occasion had not been serious the doctor might have been excused for smiling at his young friend's appearance. He was covered with the greasy red iron ore mud, great streaks of it were over his face and hands, but the gravity of events that were evidently poising for a crisis left little room for anything but sober feeling. Stuart stood over Eric.

"Poor fellow! This comes at a bad time for him."

"Yes, and for us, too," said the doctor sharply. "There's no telling what the men will do without [illegible] influence to keep them quiet. And it's only a question [illegible] from this."

"I hadn't thought of that." Stuart put his hand on Eric's forehead. A tiny [illegible] his eyes. He was [illegible] and spoke feebly.

"Stuart, you saved my life. You have [illegible] You are quite with me now."

"Eric, we had saved each other now, don't we?" Stuart spoke almost like a lover. "But we owe our lives to another man."

"How's that?" Eric was too faint to say more.

"I'll tell you when you are able to hear it. Rest now."

Eric closed his eyes, and Stuart went away to change his clothes, and all the while he felt conscious of the conviction that he stood close to the crisis of events which the evening's strange adventure had begun.

Louise had gone out somewhere to spend the evening with her friends, the Vasplaines, so Stuart and the doctor and the new minister sat down to a late dinner by themselves, and it was while eating that Stuart learned the details of his rescue.

There was little more for Mr. Burke to tell. He was a stranger to the place, but in the two days of his residence in Champion he had evidently made the most of his time. He had inquired of a passing miner about the Beury tunnel just before entering it on his search for crystals. The miner had volunteered the statement about the connection with the Davis lower level. Burke had not thought of that again until he heard Stuart's cry for help.

"Do you always carry a rope with you on your afternoon walks?" asked Stuart.

"No, I have not been in the habit of doing so; but I think it might be a very useful custom in this mining country," replied Burke. "The rope was lying on the platform at the head of the last row of ladders, and I naturally carried it down with me, not knowing what might be needed at the bottom. I suppose the men left it there when the strike was declared. I noticed their tools lying around in various places as I came through the drift."

The doctor looked at the new minister with gruff approval. A man who could now details like that was worth knowing. The Rev. Andrew Burke was evidently on the way to the doctor's friendship.

"But how did you happen to come after us?" asked Stuart, turning to the doctor.

"I was up at Rollins', the pump man who was hurt, you remember, when the boy, the same one who came to the office the other day, came in and said the engine house was on fire, and after what seemed like a year's time we managed to pry out of him that he had seen you and Eric go down the ladders a little while before. I rushed over to the shaft, and here is the mystery of it to me. Not a soul was in sight. The engineer, firemen and pump men were all gone. The ladders were blazing, so that there was no hope of descent by them. Some of the other men ran up from down town. Then we thought of the Beury tunnel and made a run for that. You know, Stuart, it's over a quarter of a mile from the shaft, but we made it in a few minutes. I fell over on a rock and smashed a lot of valuable bottles in my case. You've cost me a good sum, Stuart, counting all the days since you were born—you and Eric. I don't know that I believe in stubbing my toe very much for that hot headed young socialist and agitator. He will make a peck of trouble in the world, and I don't know but in the interest of humanity I ought to give him a little dose of something to finish him up."

Just then Eric, in the room across the hall, stirred and groaned. The doctor heard him, and, dropping his napkin absentmindedly into his soup, he hurried in to see his socialist patient.

Before he came back Stuart and Burke discussed the fact of the engine house fire. There was something to be cleared up about that. It seemed also to Stuart that the mass of iron ore which fell upon Eric was something more than a loosened fragment of the mine. The doctor was right about it. The absence of the men from the spot when the fire broke out also needed explanation.

The doctor had come back, and the meal was progressing while the three men were trying to solve the facts of the burning and the injury to Eric when a tramp of marching men was heard coming up the avenue.

The three men rose from the table together. There was a menace in the sound that was not easily mistaken. Stuart went directly into the hall and opened the great front door. By the light of the porch lamp could be seen a crowd, at least 200 men, each one carrying his stick, which in most cases approached more nearly the dimensions of a club. They were a formidable appearing mob of men, their sullen, heavy faces brought into distinct relief in the light of the electric lamp.

"Well, men," called out Stuart clearly, "what is this?"

The men meanwhile crowded up close about the veranda. One of them, acting as spokesman, came up on the steps and said in a loud voice, "We want to see Eric."

"You can't see him. He's hurt. He isn't fit to see any one!" shouted the doctor, who stood just behind Stuart in the doorway.

"What do you want to see him for?" asked Stuart calmly.

The spokesman appeared confused and did not answer at once. Then here and there through the crowd rose cries from the men.

"There's been foul play!"

"We'll string up the men that did it!"

"Yes, hang 'em!"

"Show us Eric. We want him with us tonight!"

"Men," Stuart raised his voice, "Gordon here can come in and see for you that Eric is not able to move. Come in, Gordon, and see," continued Stuart, speaking to the miner who was standing upon the steps.

The miner, after a moment's hesitation, went into the house and the doctor went with him into the room at the right of the hall where Eric lay.

While they were gone Stuart told the men how Eric was hurt. There was breathless attention while Stuart was speaking. Just as he finished Gordon came out.

"Boys," he said as he appeared on the veranda, "Eric's out of it tonight. We'll make it hot for the cowards that's done this."

"Aye, that we will!" cried a dozen voices.

"Three cheers for Mr. Duncan!" suddenly cried a voice. The men could not help knowing from their experiences in the mines that Stuart had staid by Eric during the danger, although he had said very little of himself in his narrative.

The cheers were given heartily, and Stuart felt for the first time in his life that perhaps the day would come when these men would understand him. He stepped out of the doorway, however, and, pointing in to where Andrew Burke was standing, said: "Thank you, men. But if it hadn't been for Mr. Burke here Eric would not be safe. We owe our lives to him."

"Who's he?" rudely asked some one.

"The new minister at St. John's. I knows him," replied another.

"A minister, eh? Well, three cheers for him anyway!" cried another.

The cheers were given, and the men began to move away. Stuart felt anxious, and exhausted as he was by the evening's adventure he could not help feeling that rough work would mark the night before it was over. He felt as if here was an opportunity to say a word while he was in favor with the men.

"Men, I want to say a word. I understand troops are in the town tonight. I hope you will all be law abiding and"—

"Aye, we's heard that till we's sick of it!" The voice was evidently that of a drunken man.

Stuart for the first time realized that the element of the saloon had entered into the problem. Heretofore the men had kept away from the drink.

"Shut up!" exclaimed Gordon and others. "Give Mr. Duncan fair hearing."

"I say," continued Stuart, "that I hope you will not commit any violence. I am talking to you as I know Eric would if he were here."

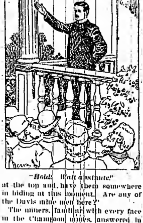
"But how about men brought in to take the bread out of our mouths?"

"Aye, that's the stuff! We'll make it hot for them, troops or no troops."

"These are not my orders, you understand," said Stuart, feeling every minute more conscious of the nature of a restless mob of men who were deprived of their regular leader. "I advise you to go to your homes in quiet. Tomorrow we will investigate the burning of the engine house and the injury to Eric."

"What's the matter with tonight?" called out another man. The voice was calm and clear.

"Very well," replied Stuart with energy, thinking in a moment the restlessness of the men might be safely diverted into another channel. "It is my opinion that the men who burned the engine house overpowered the men at the top and have them somewhere in hiding at this moment. Are any of the Davis mine men here?"



"Hold! Wait a minute!"

The miners, familiar with every face in the Champion mines, answered in many places:

"Not a man!"

"Nobody's seen Davis men since the shaft was fired?"

"Mr. Duncan's hit it. He's a bright one."

"Now, then, men, if I'm right about it the men are in hiding with the Davis crew. They can't be far off."

"We'll find 'em," yelled more than one voice.

"Hold! Wait a minute!" cried Stuart as the men began to move again. "I want you to give me your word that if the men are found you will not attempt to punish them yourselves. They have been guilty of breaking the law. Let the law deal with them. You have commended your cause to the world so far by your conduct. The minute you resort to violence of any kind public sympathy will vanish. Give me your word now that you will hand these men over to the authorities if they are found."

There was a pause, and then from different ones came the response: "We promise. Aye, we'll give the word."

Stuart felt satisfied, although there were several lawless men under the influence of drink who had not responded. The men moved off the lawn, and Stuart and the doctor and Mr. Burke saw the larger part of them go directly up the hill toward the smoldering ruins of the engine house. The rest straggled off down into town.

"There will be trouble in this town tonight," said the doctor. He went in to see Eric again, and Stuart and the minister remained in the hall. They talked together a little while, and Stuart was expressing his fears of the outcome when his telephone rang.

He went to it and conversed a moment. Then turning to Mr. Burke he said, "Do you feel able to go out this evening?"

"Yes, I am lame a little and I do not look very presentable, but I feel able as far as that goes."

Stuart went to the hall closet and brought out an overcoat for Mr. Burke. He then put on his own, saying as he did so, "I've just had a message from the Iron Cliffs company that the miners are gathering in a great mob down in the square, and they think I had better come down and use my influence to prevent an outbreak."

"Do you feel able?"

"Yes, I guess so. I'm sore and lame, that's a fact, but no bones broken, and it seems a case of duty. The doctor will stay with Eric."

"He will, eh!" said the doctor, who just then came out of the room behind Stuart. "You're as much in need of watching as Eric. Take off that overcoat and go up stairs to bed!"

"Now, doctor," replied Stuart with a sad smile, "I don't like to say I won't, but I shall say it this time. I feel as if I ought to go down to the square. There is going to be a bad night's work, I'm afraid, but not without a protest from Mr. Burke and myself."

"All right, go your ways! And if you get your heads broken don't send for me to glue the pieces together again."

The doctor went back to Eric, and Stuart, after sending word that he and Mr. Burke would be right down and after ordering the servants to bring around a horse and buggy, drove hurriedly away.

As they sped down the hill they passed several groups of miners swinging along the road at a smart foot pace. But when they reached the square there was so large a crowd gathered, overflowing into the streets, that Stuart drove around into one of the alleys and hitched his horse near the church at the rear. He and Burke then came out into the space bounded by the church and the railroad depot platform.

The miners had not been in the habit of assembling at night. All their meetings up to this time had been at noon. Their present gathering was a new development of the strike, and as Stuart and the minister crowded in at the corner by the church they both said to themselves that there were elements of a very dangerous character compressed into that spot, the commercial and social center of the town.

In the first place, there was an unusually large number of drunken men in the mob. It was growing noisier every minute. The band stand was crowded with miners. Two of them were trying to speak at the same time on opposite sides of the stand, and the confusion was doubled by their attempt. The mob of men swayed restlessly about the stand, which was lighted by an electric hanging lamp. The square was almost as light as in the daytime. Out on a side track of the railroad which skirted one side of the square the troops that had come in that afternoon were quartered in the coaches which brought them. There were two companies, and they had been ordered for some reason to remain over at Champion that night. Every allusion to the troops seemed to excite the miners to anger. The speakers in the stand mentioned them often and pointed toward their quarters. A good deal had happened that day to rouse even the sluggish, stolid men of the north. Eric's injury, while lamented by very many, was really cause for rejoicing by another large and rough element who were glad to have his leadership displaced by that of more radical but less capable men.

Stuart could not help saying, "If Eric were only here!" For the first time he realized what great power Eric had possessed. It was no small generalship to hold this rough, turbulent mass of uneducated men in check. There was no one to take Eric's place.

Stuart had no definite plan to pursue in coming down to the square. The miners as they saw him spoke respectfully and asked after Eric. He and Burke were finally in the progress of their walk crowded up on the church steps, which were covered with men.

It was now about half past 8 o'clock, and the scene was of such a character that, worn as they were by the day's events, the two men stood looking out at the faces beneath them with a certain excitement that grew upon them with every second. The noise and confusion were increasing. A fight of some kind was already in progress in the band stand. Figures swayed back and forth there. The police force of Champion was meager at any time, and it was as powerless to manage such a crowd as this as if it had been composed of little children.

Suddenly across all the other sounds in the square, rising over them, was heard the beat of drum. It was no feeble rattle of sticks, but a determined, vigorous, muscular onslaught on a bass drum by a strong right arm. And around the corner by the Iron Cliffs company's office came a squad of men and women, not more than a dozen in all, bearing a flag and singing as they came.

Our bark is sailing over life's sea to a land beyond the blue;
We're going to the promised land 'long with the chosen few.
All aboard the bark, there still is room for many, [illegible]
So you're aboard and with us go to yonder happy shore.
Our bark is laden down with wealth, with pleasures rich and rare;
There's naught like them upon the earth, and we all may have a share.
Just leave behind all worldly dross and come to God's own store;
Receive your gifts and with them cross to yonder happy shore.

Straight across the street the Salvation Army marched, singing this hymn to the tune of "O a' the airts the winds can blaw," and as they reached the side of the square a peculiar thing happened.

The miners on that side opened up a passage for the little squad so that it could pass into the square. Acting on the impulse given by mobs at times the miners began to crowd back on both sides and the army kept advancing, singing its song and marching in what seemed almost like a triumphal procession right down through the center of the square directly toward the church steps. The great heavy crowd seemed to part like magic, and down the avenue thus voluntarily provided the squad marched, beating its drum. The leader was a young woman, whose pale face possessed a prematurely aged look, but there was not a particle of self consciousness to be seen upon it, and she marched at the front as proudly and with as queenly a bearing as if her following was composed of the picked archangels of heaven's hosts. High above the shrill treble and the hoarse bass of the others her voice went out as sweet as any that Stuart had ever heard, and he wondered where such a voice had been concealed in Champion that he had never heard it before. It sang as if the words were sacred to the heart:

Just leave behind all worldly dross and come to God's own store;
Receive your gifts and with them cross to yonder happy shore.

Close at the foot of the church steps the band halted. Here the crowd was very dense. It seemed a natural vantage ground for testimony and appeal. The miners for the time appeared to yield to the influence of this attraction. Stuart said to himself, "Perhaps Eric will not be needed after all." The scene had an intense interest for him now. He forgot all about Burke and the strike and his relations to it as the woman raised her hand as a signal for the drum to cease and then made another signal for the little company to kneel. Right down on the bottom steps of the church she kneeled, just below Stuart, and with the others kneeling about her almost swallowed up in the mass of men who surged around she offered a prayer, the memory of which lingered in Stuart's heart all his life.

CHAPTER IV.

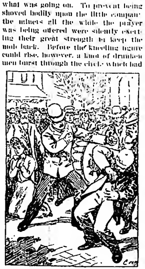
A CHANGE.

"Lord Jesus"—the pale face in the Salvation Army bonnet was raised, wholly unmindful of all the people in that great multitude—"our hearts are longing tonight for lost souls who have wandered far away from home. And we know that thou art sorrowing over them now because thou art the Good Shepherd. O Lord Jesus, we want you to come down here tonight and lead some of these sheep into the fold. Some of them are so bruised and torn with sin that they will have to be carried; but, O Lamb of God, that takest away the sin of the world, we know you are strong and can bear them in the arms of infinite love over rough places, beside the chasms of satan and through the wild torrents of death. Oh, for the cross of Calvary to be stretched out like a great arm to save tonight! Oh, for the sweet forgiveness of sin to touch these human hearts right now! O Son of Mary, our hearts are bleeding! We are weary to death of the long delayed coming of the miracle of redemption in these souls of men. Oh, bless us with the blood of the dying Saviour! Oh, raise us into new life with him who defied hell and death, although they were two to one! Jesus, I want you to come tonight. These men, these women, how precious they are. Who can tell what will be their fate if they should be called out of the world tonight? Their mothers, Lord Jesus—these strong young men, some of them, have mothers praying for them. Oh, I have dreamed of the terror of the judgment for those who reject the Saviour! We are so in need of the power here and now. Open our eyes like those of the young man to see the horses and chariots of fire around about tonight. Save with the blood that was shed for all. Come now, Lord Jesus. We have followed. Make good the promise. Yes, we want some souls. We are hungry for some to cry out, 'Saved, saved!' We want to go triumphant into the judgment. We want to sing hallelujah before the great white throne with some of these poor lost sinners here by the side of us joining in the chorus with us. Oh, wash their sins away in the precious blood! Save them, save them, Lord Jesus!"

It was not so much the words of the prayer as its intense self forgetful spirit that impressed Stuart as never in all his life before. He was not a Christian in the sense that he had ever confessed or joined a church. He had a reverent nature, and he had always lived by a rule of morality that was for him sufficient. He was too well educated, or he thought he was, to be moved by anything merely emotional or coarse like the Salvation Army and its drums and shouts. But this was different, somehow. The self forgetfulness, the self surrender, the agonizing longing for souls to be saved, all this was a part of the prayer as it swept up past him from the slight woman's form kneeling there. And never in all his experience, never in all his wanderings through great cathedrals and listening to chanted services, had he felt nearer to a true knowledge of what God is as his great controlling love for sinful man.

All this took very little time and he had no thought of acting in any way on his feelings. But while the woman was still on her knees a thing happened that in the end deepened his conviction and changed the course of possible events among the miners themselves.

The crowd was so large that only a very few could hear or see what was going on about the little band there at the foot of the church steps. It was true—at least it had been up to this time—that the Salvation Army in Champion had great influence over the miners. It was true still, but the demon of drink was abroad this night, and there is always a large and uncertain factor to reckon on when that is the case. The men nearest the little squad were pressed hard by those on the outside who wanted to see and hear what was going on. To prevent being shoved bodily upon the little company the miners all the while the prayer was being offered were silently exerting their great strength to keep the mob back. Before the kneeling figure could rise, however, a knot of drunken men burst through the circle which had been formed around her, and one of them with a kick sent his heavy boot through the drum, and another staggered, with a drunken oath, close up to the woman and raised his fist. Stuart, as he saw the face, thought that the rum crazed man imagined the kneeling figure to be that of his own wife, who had more than once begged him on her knees to spare her and her children.



Stuart gave the man a blow.

It was a flash of time, and Stuart gave the man a blow with his fist that knocked him swearing against a man behind him. Before any one could raise his arm again or strike a blow the miners had seized on every one of the assailants of the army, and a roar went up from the entire mass of excited and angered men. The influence of the army still was so strong with the great majority that it resented with the deepest indignation any indignity offered its little band of officers and men.

"Duck 'em in the fountain!" yelled some one with more than a touch of grim humor.

The "fountain" was a huge cast iron basin in the center of the square which for several years had been used for a watering trough. It had about four feet of water in it, supplied from the pumping of the mines.

The suggestion was just suited to the coarse, rough spirit of the crowd. Struggling in the clutch of a number of brawny hands, the offenders were dragged up to the basin and flung into it. As fast as they floundered out, dripping and cursing, they were thrown in again. A great roar of laughter and shouts rose from the mob. In the midst of it all the army marched out of the square singing:

Come, sinners, to the Saviour now;
He wore the thorn crown on his brow,
He shed his blood that you might be Redeemed to all eternity.

There was the same dauntless look on the leader's face. No one could say that she was disappointed or disheartened by the seeming lack of answer to her prayer or by the wild confusion all about her. The squad halted out in the street, and there another group gathered about them listening to testimony and prayer and song.

Stuart and the minister hesitated where they were for a moment, not knowing what to do now, when the crowd farthest away, over by the railroad tracks, began to run altogether toward a smaller crowd coming down the hill from the Davis mine.

"I believe the men that did the burning are caught!" cried Stuart to Burke. The two struggled over in the direction of the hill and were met by the same company that had come out to the house demanding Eric.

The newcomers marched into the square, and one of them going up into the stand told the news. They had found the engineer, fireman and pump men locked in an old dry room belonging to a recently abandoned mine about a mile up the hills, that securely, but uninjured. There was no trace of the men who had done all this for the evident purpose of firing the engine house and getting rid of Eric and Stuart as two men who would be likely to insist upon law and order as long as they had any influence. To the credit of the thousands of miners in all the ranges about Champion the attempt was regarded by the vast majority as a cowardly and murderous act, a disgrace to the name of workingmen and a setback to the cause. There was special indignation expressed against the attempt to kill or injure Eric by throwing the mass of ore down the ladder hole, for that had been done, according to the story of the men who were overpowered at the shaft's mouth. One of them at least had been an eyewitness to the outrage.

The telling of [illegible] through Champion [illegible] Stuart [illegible] vation Army [illegible] said, and a large crowd [illegible] after it. The square was [illegible] being cleared. He felt completely exhausted, now that the strain was over.

"You will [illegible] Mr. Burke?" he asked as the two walked out of the square over to where the horse had been left.

"No, Mr. Duncan. I believe I will remain down here, now I am [illegible] hotel quarters. Just as much under obligations to you. This has been a great day of experience for you. I hope you will not be the worse for it. The danger from the men seems over for tonight."

"Yes, I think so. Sorry you are not going out with me. It has been a day of experiences. I can't forget my indebtedness to you. We shall know each other better, I am sure. I need to know all the good men possible these days."

"I'm at your service, Mr. Duncan. Good night!"

"Good night." Stuart shook hands strongly and drove up the street tingling again from the pressure of that grasp. Andrew Burke's handshake suggested as much as some men's orations.

Stuart was so tired and ready for rest when he reached home that, after seeing Eric and being assured that he would get through the night with the watching of the nurse sent for by the doctor, he went up to his room.

He slept hard, but wakened early and could not go to sleep again. He had dreamed of his experience in the mine and awoke at the point where he had heard Burke's voice. He went over the whole adventure again, and then irresistibly was drawn in thought down to the town square and in memory stood on the church steps a little above the kneeling figure that prayed. He found himself saying over the words of the prayer. To his surprise he could remember almost every sentence. Then

WISDOM FROM DR. PEARSON.

The wholesome and refreshing opinions expressed by Dr. D. K. Pearson in an interview quoted recently would be entitled to respectful hearing even if he had not earlier demonstrated so generously his interest in American colleges. Backed up as they have been by gifts amounting to many hundreds thousand dollars as an evidence of his good faith in the matter, the opinions and ideas offered are particularly worthy of note.

Four things Dr. Pearsons specially emphasized in his interview: The importance of college education for the young man, whatever his occupation in life is to be; the fact that business and industrial pursuits offer more numerous and greater opportunites for success than do the professions; the great field yet existing in the west for the young man of education, energy and little or no capital otherwise, and the special value of the small colleges as compared with the big university. All of these points he fortifies in his interview with information and argument highly interesting. His expression in support of the proposition that a college education should be sought by all, no matter what their aim in life, are particularly worthy of applause. He says in part: "Whether a young man is to be a farmer, a mechanic, an electrician or a railway man. Some say a college training is unnessary to the man who tills the soil, but I say that if a man is to be a farmer his quickest way to succeed is to start in college. Four years there and six years more teaching school will make a young man able to buy a farm and start in his calling right. The man who follows this course is a farmer who can take advantage of all opportunities offered to him. We need educated farmers for public offices, and the right sort of political preferment will always come first to the college bred man if he is morally sound."

It is worth while to listen to the Pearsons and the Carnegies who have made fortunes in industrial and commercial activities and now in their later years are willing to lend their wealth and their wisdom to the young men who need advice no less than they need libraries and colleges.

ST. PAUL GLOBE SALE.

The sale of the St. Paul Globe by J. J. Hill to syndicate of Democrats has been consummated and the new company filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state last Wednesday. The capital stock is placed at $100,000, to be paid in as called for by the directors. The incorporators are John Lind, L. A. Rosing, Richard T. O'Connor, Otto Bremer and David B. Evens. The last name resides at Tracy. They will constitute a board of directors which will manage the paper.

The new concern is expected to take charge of the paper about March 15. It will be made an out-and-out Democratic organ, and it is safe to assume there will be no further holting of national platforms. Few if any changes are looked for under the new management, other than the fact that Mr. Rosing will become general manager, succeeding W. F. Luxton, who has been acting in that capicity for a couple of years. The price paid for the paper is not known on the outside.

The state superintendent of public instruction has made his March apportionment of public school moneys, the amount being determined by the state treasurer. It is on the basis of $1.25 for each pupil and is the largest per capita ever made at a March apportionment.

Thief River Falls has sold its last bond issue at a premium of $405.75.

C. G. Schultz has been appointed assistant superintendent of Public instruction. Prof. Schultz is an educator of wide acquaintance throughout the state; he is secretary of the state teacher's reading circle; has been superintendent of schools of Nicollet county for a number of years, and is a director of the Gustavus Adolphus college. He will prove a valuable assistant to State Supt. Olson.

North Dakotans are proud of the rapid growth of the state, but the influx of settlers is not entirely responsible for the increase. Eleven months ago the wife of Thomas Graham of Knox in Benson county, gave birth to twins. Last week she made Mr. Graham the happy father of more twins. Four babies in less than a year is not bad, and Mr. Graham is being congratulated.

It seems to be the opinion among lumbermen generally that the Brainerd & Northern extension will not reach BigFork river in less than two years. If that should prove to be the case, that region will not enjoy the boom that many prophesy before that time, for the simple reason that supplies cannot be gotten into that region until the road is completed, as there are innumerable swamps between Blackduck and the Big Fork.

John O'Connell, the recently appointed labor commissioner, is taking hold of the office in an energetic and commendable manner. The prime object of that office is for the protection of labor and labor interests, and Mr. O'Donnell rightly believes that this can best be done by advancing the cordial relations which should exist between employer and employe. As an instance of this, he has just completed a tour of inspection of the department stores in the larger cities, and he found several cases where the proprietors had overlooked the law requiring them to provide seats for their employes, but in every instance the proprietor willingly complied with this. when the law was explained to him.

Many successful men have borne testimony to the efficacy of newspaper advertising in the exploitation of medical food, patented and other articles, all manufacturers of such commodities agreeing that without the liberal use of newspaper space the measure of success which they achieved would have been impossible. That the same mediums of publicity are equally important to merchants and to others whose business is confined to a community or section has been proved by the practical experience of thousands. For example, Mack & Co., of Ann Arbor, who started with a small stock of goods, have built up the largest trade in general merchandise in South Michigan, and the manager has declared that the chief element in the success of his firm has been a larger use of newspaper space than has been employed by any rival establishment.

The failure of the River and Harbor bill means considerable to Northern Minnesota. All government work on the storage reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi must cease, and all work on the new dams at Winnebigoshish, Pine River and Pokegama will be suspended. This means a great deal to the Minneapolis milling industry which depends on these reservoirs to equalize the flow of water that carries logs to the mills. All work on the Red and Red Lake rivers must also cease. Perhaps the most serious blow is that of the Warroad harbor on Lake of the Woods. A floating bog several acres in extent got loose last year and drifted in to the mouth of the river at that point, completely closing the harbor to the entrance of all vessels, and rendering it impossible to carry on any shipping. Congressman Eddy had put in an item of $45,000 to remove the obstruction, and the failure of the bill leaves Warroad an inland town.

HERE AND THERE.

County division is being agitated by the people of Thief River Falls. The plan is to carve out a piece of Red Lake county, cut off the east end of Marshall, splice the two, and make Thief River Falls the county seat.—Badger Herald Rustler.

Leon correspondence in the Bemidji Pioneer. "The following church notice was pasted up in town last week: Next Sunday there will be services held in the forenoon at the west end of the town and afternoon services at the east end. Children will be baptized at both ends."

Rev. Father Theillon, of Gentilly, returned on Thursday evening from a visit to Europe, where he visited mostly with friends in France. He also visited Belgium, England and other points. He enjoyed the trip very much but is pleased to be back again among his parishioners.

John Bray and Mr. Armstrong of Red Lake Falls, came in on the stage Wednesday, and found time to call around and see the town, and make friends. Mr. Armstrong is a cigar manufacturer, and will probably locate in Blackduck. There is a good opening here, and we hope to see him start in business.—Black Duck Times.

No, gentle reader, we will not call the new county Lincoln County for the very good reason that there is already a Lincoln County in the State. This is a horse on The Press, but how about you boys who stood for the new name for three long weeks and made no roar? Let's all go out and have suthin.—Thief River Falls Press.

Says R. A. Wilkinson, of the land boom.

"It is the days of the boom of '80 and '81 over again only more so and the old conditions in the Red River Valley are now of the past. New methods, new people, new values and new prosperity are now opening to us. Wise is he who is in a position to take advantage of them."

A certain Crookston doctor made a mistake the other day and hasn't got over kicking himself about it yet. He explains that a plain old fellow came into his office for consulation and he gave him a prescription for an old-fashioned stomach ache. The doctor subsequently discovered that the old fellow was rich enough to have had appendecitis.

He is quick and keen in his perception, shrewd and discerning in judgment with a bright intellect and intelligent observation. The Blackstone students of Red Lake county had better keep an eye on their paladiums.—Warren Register.

Dr. Argue, of Red Lake Falls, who had been doing dentist work here for a couple of days, went to Thief River Falls Tuesday to attend to his parents at that place. The doctor is doing good work, as is shown by his growing practice.—St. Hilaire correspondent Crookston Journal.

The genial doctor says his parents don't live at Thief River Falls, but that the correspondent must have meant 'patients,' of whom he has a goodly number there.

Many of the lumbermen would not feel sorry to see an early spring, with the rivers on the run by early April. F. B. Newton, of Red Lake Falls, who is at the Nicollet, looks forward to a prosperous season for the lumber manufacturers, and is anxious to begin the season's cut. Stocks need replenishing in many grades and the new cut must be depended upon in that particular. The movement in the Dakotas and Manitoba will have a good effect upon the lumber market.—Minneapolis Journal.

Owing to the change of reporting committees last week we were unable to get notes in time.

Quite an excitement was caused Friday morning by one of the lower grade pupils getting hurt while sliding on the ice.

The program rendered last Friday by the literary society was fair. The musical numbers were especially good and were highly applauded. After the program the election of officers took place and the following were elected: Pres., Norman Schreiter; Vice Pres., Etta Garceau; Secretary, Pauline Neiland; Treasurer, Wm. Hunt; Librarian, Dan Johnson. Much enthusiasm was manifested as every one of those elected is very popular.

The teachers have found it necessary to make a new law for those in the programs who are unavoidably absent on Literary program days, which is, that they shall recite their parts before the school on the following Monday.

Effie Hamry has left school and will soon start teaching.

There are some members of the High School who have no thought of the pain they are inflicting on the participants of the Literary program when their boisterous laugh echoes in the room during the painful pause of forgetfulness. It has already caused sensitive, bashful pupils to forget what they have to say, and spoils an otherwise good program. It is a rude habit which should be stopped, and many sometimes fall back on those who indulge in it.

Nickolai Nelson, of Garnes, a boy sixteen years of age, was brought down Tuesday charged with incorrigibility, after a hearing before Justice O. N. Skomedahl, of Garnes. Thirteen cars of immigrant goods were sidetracked at Erskine Thursday morning and this is said to be only the advance guard of what is to follow. The new settlers are from southern Minnesota and Iowa and come well supplied with this world's goods. The lands chosen by them for their new homes are largely in Badger, Poplar River and Lambert.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Kaufer, today, a son. The young man starts out with twelve pounds avoirdupois to his credit, and like a dutiful son, timed his arrival so as to begin his career of usefulness on press day. He has not expressed his preference, but judging from his proclivities he will not be averse to accepting a position as feeder, to start with.

Auditor Zeh says he visited Warren recently and the sentiment there was strongly in favor of giving Thief River Falls the territory east of the line dividing Excel and Newfolden township, a bunch of twenty townships. Thief River Falls can win in this matter if it is properly boodled. The indications are that Red Lake Falls will be with the Upper Falls to a man.

Mike McNamara, who came back to his old haunts here from Montana, three months ago, to winter, accompanied by eight teams, is about ready to return. HIGH WATER MARK

HUNDREDS OF HOMESEEKERS PASS THROUGH ST. PAUL TO THE WEST.

Tremendous Movement Due to the Low Railroad Rates in Effect—Three Litchfield Children Shot for Snowballing a Passerby—Grand Jury Investigating Duluth Officials—Reapportionment Bill Passed—State News in General.

St. Paul, March 12.—During the three weeks this season that reduced colonist rates have been in effect the tide of immigration into the Northwest has touched a point above high water mark for the same period in more recent years. And its volume is increasing. The present week gives every indication of developing a tremendous movement. Officials who know thoroughly the territory that is being drawn from are advised that the work of their agents and their literature has acted as a powerful leaven, and the cry is "westward."

Strange as it may appear, the movement from the Southwest, embracing Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, continues to swell the business. So pronounced is this that strong pressure is understood to have been brought to bear on the Great Western to induce it to withdraw its published $25 colonist rate from Kansas City to north coast points through this gateway. The lines of that territory do not relish the sight of well-to-do homeseekers moving away to other states of the Union.

SHOT THREE CHILDREN.

Minnesota Man Becomes Enraged at Being Snowballed.

Litchfield, Minn., March 12.—A man named Kaddetz was placed in the county jail here for shooting three children, one of whom will probably die.

Kaddetz was passing a schoolhouse in the township of Cosmos, this (Meeker) county, during the afternoon, where the pupils were outside playing. They threw several snowballs at Kaddetz, which enraged him so that he drew a revolver and fired several times into the group of children, hitting three of the number. One, Richard Madson, is at the point of death and no hope for him is entertained.

Kaddetz was soon arrested and brought to Litchfield. Intense popular indignation prevails.

UP TO THE GRAND JURY.

Charges Against Duluth Officials Will Be Probed.

Duluth, March 9.—Judge Cant has charged the grand jury to investigate the public matters that have aroused so much interest lately, calling their attention particularly to the charges that certain city officials, contrary to the provisions of the charter, have been engaged in contracts with the city, and to the charges that the parties in charge of the poor farm have been paying extravagant prices and purchasing extravagant supplies for that institution.

These matters will be thoroughly investigated, together with any others that may come up. The smallpox matter is the one first referred to, that about city officers selling things to the city. It is charged that Fire Commissioner Abrahamson and Alderman Trevillon have sold the health department most of the supplies in their respective lines, clothing and groceries.

REAPPORTIONMENT BILL.

Minnesota House Passes the Committee Measure—Senate Amends It.

St. Paul, March 11.—After a debate lasting more than two hours, during which the Hennepin delegation sought in various ways to amend the reapportionment bill, the house, by a vote of 82 to 31, passed the bill as introduced, all amendments being voted down.

The bill was amended in the senate by placing Redwood county in the Second district and Waseca in the First. It is believed the house will concur in the amendment.

The house postponed for one week action on the senate early adjournment resolution.

The senate in committee of the whole favorably acted on the $20,000 Pan-American exposition bill.

Death the Result of a Dream.

Binghampton, N. Y., March 5.—John Bone of Anoka, Minn., died at the residence of his daughter in Kirkwood Center as the result of a dream. He had for some time been suffering from heart trouble, but had considerably improved. His daughter, who slept in an adjoining room, was aroused by a peculiar sound and going to her father's couch found him sitting up in bed white with fear. He said he had had a fearful vision, and then fell over unconscious. Physicians gave it as their opinion that he had a nightmare and the shock caused a state of collapse.

Minnesota Iron Mine Deals.

Duluth, March 7.—A deal whereby the Spruce Mining company, owner of the Spruce mine at Eveleth, passes into the control of the Lake Superior Consolidated Iron Mines is being perfected, and the $1,000,000 of stock of the company will be formally transferred in New York in a day or two. The consideration is $700,000. The Consolidated has also acquired the Cloquet mine at Eveleth. The total consideration for both properties is about $550,000.

APPROPRIATES $20,000.

Minnesota Will Be Represented at the Buffalo Exposition.

St. Paul, March 10.—The senate has passed, without amendment, the house bill appropriating $20,000 for a Minnesota exhibit at the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo.

The house has refused, 56 to 40, to concur in the senate amendments to the reapportionment bill and asked a conference. The bill to repeal the corrupt practices act, which came into the house with a favorable report from the elections committee, was called up and, after a warm debate was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 49 to 42.

The house passed under suspension of the rules the senate bills setting aside $75,000 for seed grain loans to farmers who lost their crops by floods or drouth last year.

INVOLVES ABOUT $350,000.

Lumber Cut of 30,000,000 Feet Sold by One Company.

Duluth, March 6.—The biggest lumber deal of the year in the Duluth market was closed during the day when Duncan Brewer & Co. sold their entire cut for the season of 1901 to the Pilsen Lumber company of Chicago. This is a transaction involving at least 30,000,000 feet and in the neighborhood of $350,000. Following so close on the heels of the Clark-Jackson sale of 21,000,000 to the Cleveland Box company and other deals of magnitude, including the Alger, Smith & Co. deal of 20,000,000 feet, has produced a boom in lumber here. It is estimated that 100,000,000 feet of lumber has been sold during the past few weeks in the Duluth-Ashland market.

BURNED TO A CRISP.

Horrible Fate of a Two-Year-Old Child at St. Paul.

St. Paul, March 11.—Two-year-old Asa Groghen was burned to death in the apartments of the child's aunt, Mrs. Gunther, 1937 University avenue. The Groghen apartments are directly across the hall from Mrs. Gunther's rooms. The child left its home for his aunt's rooms, where he was accustomed to play, but Mrs. Gunther was not at home. His absence was not noticed. When Mrs. Gunther did return she found the little fellow's charred body on the floor and several match stubs by the remains. The odor of burned flesh filled the rooms. The clothes were completely burned off and the body could scarce be recognized.

RETURNED MANY FOLD.

Lucky Investment in Mesaba Stock by Duluth Pastor.

Duluth, March 5.—Through a lucky investment of her late husband, Mrs. C. H. Dunn, the widow of the former pastor of the First Methodist church here, is now independently wealthy. In 1891 Rev. Mr. Dunn gave his note for $500 for some mining stock on the Mesaba range and a few days ago the widow disposed of it for over $800,000. The original company and property was absorbed by the Consolidated Mining company and the stockholders were issued Consolidated stock for their interest in the former property, and Mr. Dunn received 10,000 shares, which his widow has just disposed of for the sum stated.

WENT THROUGH THE ICE.

Seven Teams Meet a serious Mishap Near Dresbach, Minn.

La Crosse, Wis., March 12.—The ice in the Mississippi river is in a very dangerous condition for travel, caused by a rise in the river. Seven teams, all loaded with hay, went through the ice and one team was drowned. The teams were in line when the first broke through, and all the others followed. The drowned horses were owned by David McMann. The accident occurred at a point near Dresbach, Minn. The drivers of the teams had a narrow escape. The other teams were rescued by a crew of men working on the shore.

SCHOOL TEACHER'S BRAVERY.

Minnesota Girl Rescues a Child From a Burning Building.

Itasca Lake, Minn., March 9.—Clad only in a nightdress, with the mercury way below zero, Miss Mae Oryll, teacher of the school here, rushed into her burning boarding house and at the risk of her life brought from the building the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. Whitney. When she reappeared in the street with the child clasped in her arms, her long hair, which had been badly scorched by the flames, was the only covering the girl had.

Northwestern Flour Output.

Minneapolis, March 9.—The flour output at Minneapolis last week, according to The Northwestern Miller, was 271,745 barrels, as compared with 351,200 for the corresponding week last year. Superior and Duluth ground 9,600 barrels. Flour sales were a little lighter in volume, the stationary position of wheat no doubt exercising some influence. There were mills which made good sized foreign sales, but they were the exception.

Smallpox in Lumber Camps.

Two Harbors, Minn., March 5.—Three more cases of smallpox were brought in from the lumber camps, about 12 miles from here, and taken to the logging company's pesthouse at Silver Creek, the town pesthouse being filled. Every case so far comes from the lumber camp. The disease is a very mild form and very few are left marked.

WYLIE GAZETTE.

Edited by H. P. JOHNSON, WYLIE, MINN.

A department devoted to the interests of Wylie and the district tributary. Subscriptions received by H. P. Johnson.

The Bray correspondent for a Crookston paper has in a long column of phat called special attention to the marriages that have occured this winter in his jurisdiction. We agree to the facts in the long "write up" that Polk Centre abounds in bachelors and that a wedding ought to materialize occasionally to break the deadlock. The correspondent of this district is envious of the many attractive wedding items that have crowned the Bray news this winter, with none to adorn his. What their long bachelorship is due to we do not know. We know they are a very intelligent and cautious set of men, and we also agree that we need all the young men, and wish them to keep in the summer of life as long as possible. True perhaps there are those who have wished to get married and have not succeeded, a mere probability and guess, but we expect them to get there in due time. And when they then pass into the sweet destiny of matrimony, we expect it to be the more glorious, as the delicate twinkling of stars, like the dazzling streaks of the Northlight, at the advent of a glorious morning, vanish in the beams of a rising sun.

A Life And Death Fight.

Mr. W. A. Hines of Manchester, Ia., writing of his almost miraculous escape from death says: "Exposure after measles induced serious lung trouble, which ended in Consumption. I had frequent hemorrhages and coughed night and day. All my doctors said I must soon die. Then I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, which completely cured me. I would not be without it even if it cost $5.00 a bottle. Hundreds have used it on my recommendation and all say that it never fails to cure Throat, Chest and Lung Troubles." Regular size 50c and $1.00. Trail bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store.

AN EXPENSIVE CITY.

What It Costs to Support the Municipal Government of New York for a Single Year.

New York is the most extravagant city in the world. Great countries, possessing millions of square miles of territory, are governed more cheaply. One hundred million dollars! This is double the cost of the government of Mexico, with its 15,000,000 inhabitants, including the cost of Mexico's army and navy. It is almost one-third of the cost of the government of the German empire, and Germany has a population of 52,000,000. It is a quarter as great as the cost of the government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, including its army, its gigantic navy and the interest on its debt. France's burden of taxation is crushing that wealthy nation of 40,000,000 inhabitants, yet New York's city government costs one-sixth as much as that of France. The expenditure of the government of the United States in 1860, when the country's population was 31,000,000, was $63,000,000, or not very much more than half the yearly cost of the support of the government of New York city at the present time, says the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

One hundred million dollars! This is in excess of five times the cost of carrying on the government of the imperial state of New York with a population considerably more than 7,000,000. The departments of water supply and of docks and ferries are supported by their own revenues.

QUEEN WILHELMINA'S JOKE.

The German papers are telling the story of one of the jokes in which the queen of Holland delights. One Christmas day she, as usual, received the professors of the Dutch universities. When one learned man greeted her, she met him with an air of childish relief and confidence.

"Oh, my dear, Myneer, I am so glad that you have come," she said. "I have wanted you. Here is a letter of thanks from a little king. We conferred the Order of the Lion upon him because he was so good to our Dutch subjects. Now we want you, who are so famous a linguist, to pronounce for us the name of our friend."

The flattered professor took the paper, looked at it, stammered and blushed until the kind-hearted little queen relented.

"Never mind about it now," she said; "take it home and study it."

The name signed to the letter was Djozakartha. Hamangkal Boenwono Senoyssanti ing ngalogo Ngabdser Rahmen Sajidla Panoto gdmo Lafakatollat VII.

WYLIE BREVITIES

Read our merchants' ads in this issue.

Jake Thill, one of our popular citizens, drove to the county seat Monday.

Chas. J. Larson went to Wylie Saturday on horseback, but had to walk back as his horse chose to come home alone.

A carload of farm machinery has just arrived for Leppert Bros. This firm yet in its infancy has done well. Success to our merchants means prosperity to our town and prosperity in our country. It is handy to have Wylie station here; every one knows how it was before. We are now in a prosperous community, with many conviniences.

Chas Johnson last Sunday made his report to the congregation of the conference meeting. He said everything passed off harmoniously, and had many greetings to extend to our congregation from the many ministers who know of us. He reported how he made his financial errands, as treasurer of the congregation here, he has handled over a thousand a year for the church which speaks very well for the congregation.

At the caucus held at Wylie Saturday, Frank Scherrick was nominated candidate for chairman, Gust Naplin and Chas. Johnson as supervisors, O. T. Romsos clerk, P. E. Smitlesang treasurer, Chas. Liebel assessor. C. J. Larson and Fred Leppert justices of the peace. Nick Eckstien constable. It seemed to be rather hard to get candidates for justice of the peace. They thought there was no money in it, as a result of a country so flooded with bachelors. John Naplin acted as secretary, O. T. Romsos and H. P. Johnson tellers.

Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism

From the Vindicator, Rutherfordton, N.C.

The editor of the Vindicator has had occassion to test the efficacy of Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice with the most remarkable results in both cases. First, with rheumatism in the shoulder from which he had suffered excruciating pain for ten days, which was relieved with two applications of Pain Balm, rubbing the parts afflicted and realizing instant benefit and entire relief in a very short time. Second, in rheumatism in the thigh joint, almost prostrating him with sever pain, which was relieved by two applications, rubbing with the liniment on retiring at night, and getting up free from pain. NEW FANGLED FISH STORY.

First Under Water Operation Known to Science Performed in Home Aquarium.

Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, the president of the Academy of Natural Sciences, is very fond of a collection of goldfish which he keeps in a big aquarium in his office. Some months ago one of the most amiable of these fish developed a kind of fungus growth on its tail. The growth became huge and the fish lost appetite, grew thin and seemed to be pining away, says the Philadelphia Record. It turned at last on its side—a sign that it was half dead, as all keepers of aquaria know.

Dr. Dixon then decided to operate on the goldfish and with great care he performed the first under-water operation known to science, amputating entire the tail, which had been rendered useless by the fungi overrunning it. The goldfish bore the shock well and began forthwith to improve in health. Strangest of all is the fact that a fine new tail has already grown out from the stump of the diseased one.

One Day for Bathing in Mexico.

Only one country in the world has a national bathing day, and that is Mexico. The day is the 24th of June, and in the 24 hours so nominated every one in the republic, from President Diaz down to the commonest servant, is expected to take a good wash. Unnumbered thousands allow no water to touch their persons except on this occasion, known as St. John's day.—Chicago Chronicle.

Glorious News.

Comes from Dr. D. B. Cargile, of Washita, I. T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs. Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. Terrible sores would break out on her head and face, and the best doctors could give no help; but her cure is complete and her health is excellent." This shows what thousands have proved,—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers, boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidneys and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion builds up the strength. Only 50 cents. Sold W. A. Schreiter Druggist. Guaranteed.

DEADLY CARBON MON-OXIDE.

Its Insidious and Fatal Effects Graphically Illustrated in Recent Accidents.

The recent death of one laundress and narrow escape of another through the breathing of escaping gas from a laundry stove in which there was a coke fire, both of them overcome while awake and working and in a large room full of doors and windows, recalls the graphic account given by Dr. A. E. Miller of the wholesale poisoning which occurred by this same gas, carbon monoxide, at the Snaefell mining disaster. A rescuing party was overtaken by the gas and one of their number kept writing a description of his sensations as long as his pencil would trace the words. He wrote:

"We all sat without moving or trying to escape; the foot of the ladder was close by, yet none of us made any effort to go to it and ascend even a single rung. We none of us tried to walk a dozen steps, which would have led us to the other side of the shaft partition, where we all knew there was a current of better air."

The poisonous gases in these cases were carbon mon and di oxide, chiefly the former, both of which are present in ordinary illuminating gas, says the New York Times. The carbon monoxide, which is by far the more dangerous of the two, is present in the so-called water gas (which has largely replaced the old-fashioned coal gas in the large cities) to the extent of 20 to 30 per cent. Its insidious and paralyzing nature may be seen from the way in which the rescuing party simply sat down and waited for death, when a few steps would have saved them, and in the fact that two able-bodied, healthy women were overcome while wide awake and not six feet from several doors and windows.

The dangerous stealthiness of this gas seems to be due to its gradual combination with the haemoglobin of the blood (which is the agent carrying oxygen to the tissues and removing the waste carbon dioxide), into a very stable compound, so stable in fact, that it prevents the usual absorption of oxygen in the lungs and thus really brings about an asphyxiation of the tissues. It is the poisonous gas given off from burning charcoal, which is sometimes used for suicidal purposes.

FOR RETAIL DEALERS

MEASURE TO RESTRICT PEDDLERS OF HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, March 13.—A bill has been introduced in the house by Mr. Stack to establish a uniform license fee for all peddlers in all organized towns and cities in the state. If it becomes a law peddlers will have to pay fees of $1 per day, $10 per month, or $40 per year. This matter has been agitated by the retail merchants association for several years. The merchants hope to secure a uniform law which will defy the special legislation attacks. They claim the peddlers not only work serious detriment to their business but sell inferior goods.

The bill for the establishment of uniform fees and mileage for grand and petit jurors was defeated. The bill raised the fees from $1 to $2 and $3 a day.

Senator Grindeland has submitted a codification of the laws relating to county drainage work.

SEED WHEAT

We have selected some very choice seed wheat, that we will sell or exchange. We have both pure Scotch Fife and Blue Stem, and it is free from all foul seed, cleaned ready for a seeder. This wheat was raised in the bottom lands near the Red River of the North, and is about as fine a sample of wheat as we have ever seen. We have tested samples of the wheat that has been damaged by rain and find that about only forty of fifty per cent of it will grow, and when it does grow it makes a very puny and inferior straw. As a matter of fact there are very few farmers who appreciate the value of a change of seed. They will go on year after year seeding the old, run out, cockly seed, when a good strong seed gives them from 2 to 3 bushels per acre more and it does not cost any more to plow, harrow, seed or harvest, and they would have a good seed wheat of their own the following year. Sample of this seed wheat can be seen at our office or at the Crompe Elevator.

EXPLODED.

NO HAUNTED HOUSE—STORY STARTED IN FUN HAS COLLAPSED.

Another ghost story has been exploded. Some jokers started the story a couple of weeks ago that the old Hillgrove residence on the North Side was haunted. A fine piece of fiction was worked out, and the usual number of credible innocents were found who believed in it. The owner started out Saturday to lay low the ghost and succeeded without much trouble. When Messrs. Fred Bargdorf and Tip Nolan heard that the tale was being taken seriously they explained that they were the original inventors and patentees of this particular brand of ghost story, that they had circulated the haunted house report for the benefit of one of their co workers at the drill, and that the whole affair was a simon pure fake gotten up for fun. Thus another ghost story has fallen by the wayside.

Pan-American Exposition.

Nothing since the World's Fair at Chicago, in 1893, has elicited the widespread interest that is manifest all over the world in the Pan American Exposition, which is to be held in Buffalo, from May 1st to November 1st, 1901.

The purpose of the exposition is to illustrate the progress of the countries of the Western Hemisphere during a century of wonderful achievements, and to bring together into closer relationship the people composing the many states, territories and countries of the three Americas. Acting under proper authority the president of the United States has invited all the Republics and Colonies of the American Hemisphere to join in commemorating the close of the Nineteenth and beginning of the Twentieth Century, by holding this International Exposition, on the Niagara frontier.

For this important event, the Nickel Plate Road has issued an attractive descriptive folder pamphlet, elaborately illustrating the Pan American Exposition, the buildings and grounds.

The Nickel Plate Road is the short line between Chicago and Buffalo, and affords competent train service from Chicago to Buffalo, New York City, Boston and all points east, with trains of modern equipment on which no extra fees are charged; also dining car service of the highest order. It affords meals in its dining car on the individual club plan, ranging in price from 35c to $1.00.

Call on any ticket agent for Pan American folder of the Nickel Plate Road, or address John Y. Calahan, General Agent, 111 Adams st, Chicago.

Parties desiring hotel or rooming accommodations at Buffalo or Niagara Falls, during any period of the Pan American Exposition, are invited to apply by letter or otherwise to F. J. Moore, General Agent, 291 Main st., Buffalo, N. Y.

Another Victory for America.

New York, Oct. 8.—A cablegram from Paris was received today at the office of the American Book company in this city, stating that it had carried off the highest honors ever bestowed upon any educational publishing house in the world. The International Jury of the Paris Exposition awarded it the following prizes for superior text-books: In elementary education, a grand prize; in secondary education, a grand prize; in industrial and commercial education, a gold medal; and in other departments, two silver medals.

Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism

From the Vindicator, Rutherfordton, N.C

The editor of the Vindicator has had occasion to test the efficacy of Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice with the most remarkable results in both cases. First, with rheumatism in the shoulder from which he had suffered excruciating pain for ten days, which was relieved with two applications of Pain Balm, rubbing the parts afflicted and realizing instant benefit and entire relief in a very short time. Second, in rheumatism in thigh joint, almost prostrating him with sever pain, which was relieved by two applications, rubbing with the liniment on retiring at night, and getting up free from pain. Time to Pay Taxes.

In these cruel times of tax-paying, when we begin to wonder if life is worth the expense, there is always a lack of knowledge on requirements of the law. We have got the following instructions direct from the county treasurer. All taxes are due on the first Monday of January, each year. Personal property tax becomes delinquent March 1st, when a penalty of 10 per cent. is added. Personal property taxes unpaid April 1st are collected by the sheriff. On June the 1st a penalty of 10 per cent. is added to all unpaid current real estate tax; said penalty may be avoided by the payment of one half of said tax before June 1st and the other half before Nov. 1st, and said tax will become delinquent on the first Monday of January next, when an additional penalty of 5 per cent. is added. Tax sale takes place on the first Monday in May following, and the amount of sale draws interest at the rate of one per cent per month until redeemed. If not redeemed within three years from date of sale, all lands become the absolute property of the state or purchaser.

IMPORTANT CASE.

ONE TO TEST THE TWO PER CENT. GROSS EARNINGS TAX LAW.

St. Paul, March 20.—In the district court in St. Paul there is under consideration by the judges an action which, if the decision goes against the state, will cost the treasury considerable money. By this action the fast freight and transportation lines seek to have declared unconstitutional the law providing for a two per cent gross earnings tax. They claim that this tax is, in effect, a property tax, and is opposed to the constitutional provision which prohibits a flat rate and requires uniformity of taxation. The Canada Cattle Car company and the Union Refrigerator Transit line are the petitioners in the case.

TWO WOMEN KNIGHTED.

Earned the Honor by Gallantry During Siege of Legation in China.

In the list of honors proposed by the French foreign office and just signed by the president of the republic are the names of two ladies, Mme. Lieutier and Mme. von Rosthorn. The two new feminine knights of the Legion of Honor have both been decorated for gallant conduct in China. The former is the lady superintendent of the French hospital at Peitang, the latter the wife of the charge d'affaires of Austro-Hungary at Peking, who has been made an officer of the Legion of Honor. M. and Mme. von Rosthorn, after the destruction of the Austro-Hungarian legation, sought refuge in the French residence, where both husband and wife helped in the defense of the besieged, building with untiring energy. Lieut. Darcy describes a fierce struggle which took place on June 28 and in which M. and Mme. von Rosthorn displayed great bravery, the lady being badly wounded about the face and hands while assisting her husband in setting fire to a Chinese barricade by throwing handfuls of ignited straw saturated with petroleum on the structure. Mme. von Rosthorn is the second woman of foreign nationality upon whom the French government has bestowed the cross of the Legion of Honor, says the London Telegraph. The first was a Belgian, Marie Jeanne Shelliack, who fought in the wars of the first revolution, under Dumouriez, and of the empire under Napoleon, taking part in the battles of Jemmapes, Arcole, Austerlitz and Jena. In 1809, when she left the army, at 52 years of age with the rank of sublieutenant, she had served 17 years, fought in 13 campaigns and had been wounded eight times. On her retirement Napoleon gave her the cross of the Legion of Honor, which he himself pinned on to her soldier's coat, telling the officers to salute her as he did so, because she was one of the "glories of the empire."

AFFECTS SALOONS.

THE ANTI-WINE ROOM BILL GOES THROUGH THE HOUSE.

Briggs' Bureau, Special Telegraph Service.

St. Paul, March 20.—The anti-wine room bill has passed the house after being amended. The original bill provided that there should be no partitions anywhere in a building in which liquor was sold. This was found to be too broad and it was amended so that such partitions may be retained, but there must be a door at least two and a half feet wide and six and a half feet high in each of them, so arranged that a full view of the room can be obtained at all times, and this doorway must not be closed by a door or by curtains.

Silver Bros., of Bemidji, are sending out a plat of the new townsite of Bridgie, on the proposed extension of the Brainerd & Northern, north of Bemidji. It is a promising point, in the midst of a well timbered country, interspersed with choice farming land, and over 40 lots have already been disposed of at prices ranging from $250 for corner lots to $150 for inside locations. The well known logging firm of Backus & Brooks will make their headquarters there next fall, the railroad being expected to reach there then. Bridgie is in Itasca county.

A Red Lake Falls Boy Honored.

Dr. J. R. McNerthney has been elected mayor of Delavan, Minnesota. The account of the election is taken from the Delavan Herald. Dr. McNerthney is a Red Lake Falls boy and his professional and other successes are highly pleasing to his many friends here. The Herald says:

Perhaps never before in the history of Delavan did her people manifest as great an interest as at the recent election. Dr. McNerthney seemed to be the choice of the people for mayor, and won over his opponent, Mr. K. A Mikkelsen, with a neat majority. The fact that the doctor located here less than two years ago and being one of the youngest physicians in the county, fully demonstrates that our people appreciate a self made young man. He is humble, ever willing to learn and work, strictly temperate, now President of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union. We feel assured he will manifest as deep an interest in municipal affairs as he has in his medical practice, which has ranked him as one of the most successful and foremost physicians in the county. He is backed by Messrs. R. P. Smith, M. S Reynolds and A. J. Armstrong, an able body of men who really fathers of our little city and cradled her from birth. With such men at the helm we bespeak for Delavan a bright and prosperous year.

A TRIFLE BETTER.

REPRESENTATIVE RAPP IS REPORTED AS SLIGHTLY IMPROVED.

Reports received this morning from St. Paul, where Representative Chas. B. Rapp, of St. Hilaire, is lying dangerously ill, are to the effect that his almost hopeless condition is slightly improved, and that hopes are entertained for his ultimate recovery.

O. F. Post, business partner and a half brother of the sick man, who was called to his bedside nearly a week ago, returned from St. Paul this morning and verified the foregoing statement.

"Rapp is very ill," he said "and it is hard telling which way his illness will turn, although he is somewhat improved. Urgent business matters demand my presence at home, and I left the capital last evening. My wife will remain with the sick man until a change takes place."

Mr. Rapp's many friends here and in the entire valley are anxiously awaiting additional reports from the sick chamber.—Crookston Journal March 18
